What Is Heaven? He Knows
Deadly Gas Guards Gold

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

In 1909 William Randolph Hearst established the International News Service, a world-wide news collecting agency, designed to make his many publications independent, if necessary, of all other news agencies.

This year International News Service celebrated its 25th anniversary, congratulating itself, with good reason, on many brilliant accomplishments. President Roosevelt writes to Joseph V. Connolly, president of International News, a letter of congratulations, most gratifying to the young men who have worked hard to make of International News the greatest news agency in the world.

One paragraph in the President's letter is important to all Americans, settling, so far as the President's term of service is concerned, the question as to continued freedom of the press.

President Roosevelt writes:

"I do not believe it would be amiss here for me to say that I personally find high satisfaction in the knowledge that it is possible in this land of ours for anyone to establish a newspaper or a news service and to enjoy the freedom of operation guaranteed by our fathers, and which, I am glad to say, still prevails. I am glad, too, that our government never has seen fit to subsidize a newspaper or a news service, and I dare to make the prediction that it never will."

That settles, for the present, one important question. The government will not subsidize, nor will it seem to control, any newspaper or news service.

President Roosevelt's character and antecedents would make any other message on the subject from him impossible

"Dillinger guns blast way out of trap. U. S. officers hot on heels of desperado. Two killed in attempt to capture gang in north woods hideout. Outlaws slip out back door of resort."

That no longer is news. If police officers should meet Dillinger, and not have their revolvers and bullet-proof vests taken from them, that would be news.

After their latest interview with John Dillinger, the officials had to show for their efforts one officer, one outsider killed. They also had three young lady friends of the desperado, who came "choking and gasping" out of an inn when government agents threw in gas bombs.

And they have an interesting souvenir. John Dillinger's suitcase with "pajamas and silk shirts."

"Four flee from Indiana prison. Three serving terms for murder among cell-breakers."

That is not news either. The system of justice that catches criminals and lets them go, can't build a jail to hold them, is now generally accepted as a farce.

We build zoological garden cages that hold elephants, rhinoceroses, lions, tigers, bears. They don't escape. But that is easily explained. Rhinoceroses and elephants don't know how to bribe keepers. The "Heroic Dillinger" did not escape with the aid of a toy wooden pistol. It is charged that he was aided in his dash for liberty by the use of hard cash. No heroism about that.

At Blackwell, Okla., the Rev. Dr. Pool, 80, retired Methodist minister, returned to the pulpit to preach a revival sermon. Raising his eyes, he asked: "What is heaven like?" Fell, and died of a heart attack. His question, doubtless, was answered within the minute.

Many would like to know the answer. Human beings have answered that question in ten thousand ways, each answer reflecting some human idea of happiness. The Oriental heaven, which Christians inherit, impresses modern minds as a magnificent piece of jewelry, with interesting, strange animals, but nothing much happening.

The red Indian heaven, with bisons and bears to kill, seems more exciting. The Mohammedan heaven, where ladies with bodies of solid musk confer happiness on the Mohammedans, all thirty feet tall, is not particularly attractive to a family man. And the Buddhist "Nirvana," where you simply enter into nothingness, seems not worth working for.

The average American will hope that heaven offers opportunities for work, struggle, even for competition, with all respect for NRA, and some opportunity

NET CLOSING IN DILLINGER MAN HUNT

Mercer, Wis., April 24—In the snow-covered wilds of the north country, a snarling killer wolf—John Dillinger—was believed near his last stand today.

A hundred of Uncle Sam's ablest man-hunters are in the woods. Almost hourly, airplanes, zooming from south, east and west, are bringing additional re-enforcements.

Crafty as a fox, the Indiana outlaw and his band of desperate slayers so far managed to keep clear of the slowly closing ring of machine guns and rifles, but the government that the Indiana slayer has so brazenly flouted is certain that Dillinger's end is but a short way ahead.

An army of local police and constabulary in three states is aiding in the hunt for the bank robber.

W. Carter Baum, department of justice agent, was killed in the gang's escape from the Wisconsin resort.

In Wisconsin, Michigan and Minnesota every crossroads is care-

COUNTY RULE EVILS CITED TO VOTERS

While New England still holds stubbornly to the county form of government, the rest of the nation is realizing that its present system is archaic and sadly in need of reorganization, delegates attending the biennial convention of the National League of Women Voters at the Hotel Statler were told today.

The speaker was Mrs. D. C. Prince of Swathmore, Pa., who is in charge of a survey of county government now being conducted throughout the country.

Mrs. Prince was not sparing in her criticism of the evils that have grown up about the old-fashioned county system.

"New England still holds to the county form of government—a system that was originated by the Duke of York," Mrs. Prince declared.

"In our survey of county governments we have discovered that in many communities in New England many unnecessary

IRVING MILLEN MURTON MILLEN ABE FABER LOUIS BERRETT

As the Millen brothers and Faber left the conveyance in which they had been taken to the courthouse from Dedham jail today, a lad who was under similar escort only a few months ago at another courthouse stood at the edge of the crowd and gazed curiously at the handcuffed trio. He was Louis Berrett, who, with Clement Molway, was tried at Salem for the holdup slaying of C. Fred Summer in a Lynn theater. Berrett and Molway, face to face with the electric chair, were freed, however, soon after the arrest of the Millen brothers and not by the movement of a single facial muscle did Berrett display any feelings today as he gazed on the accused trio. DEATH SHOTS ECHO AGAIN ON STAND IN TRIAL

BULLETIN

Dedham Courthouse, April 24— Two Millen sisters at their first day in court and their first appearance in Dedham, broke down and cried at the sight of their brothers in shackles and behind the cross-bar iron cage, surrounded by guards.

Arnold McIntosh, bank treasurer, who earlier identified Murton Millen as one of the robbers, this afternoon identified that Irving Millen and Abe Faber closely resembled the two others.

Miss Elizabeth Kimball, secretary to the treasurer of the Needham Trust Co., this afternoon identified Murton Millen as the man who fired the machine gun through the window of the bank.

Dedham Courthouse, April 24 — Fast-moving testimony opened the actual trial of the Millen brothers and Abe Faber today, close on the heels of a stirring opening by Dist.-Atty. Edmund R. Dewing that charged Murton Millen as the "trigger man" in the holdup and murder at the Needham Trust Co.

And the actual testimony had hardly started when a witness pointed an accusing finger at the prisoner's cage to place the same Murton at the scene of the crime Feb. 2.

Faber, Dist. Atty. Dewing charged in his dramatic one-hour opening, was the man who fired the shots that wounded "the 77-year-old stout-hearted Walter Bartholomew," guard at the Needham Trust Company, during the robbery of which the murders occurred.

WIDOW HEARS IN TEARS

Patrolman Haddock's widow, in a corner of the crowded courtroom, sat rigid, tears in her eyes, as the diminutive district attorney described the killing of her husband.

Rev. Norman Brighton, Norma Millen's father, sat nearby and heard his daughter referred to as the driver of the car which took three men from the scene of their efforts to hide their trail.

Raw drama in the shadow of tragedy, with two lives taken and three more lives at stake came to the courtroom while a crowd waited outside, elbowing for an opportunity to get in.

Braves Field, April 24—A bright, warm sun beamed down from a cloudless canopy of blue, making the weatherman's face very red, as Bill McKechnie's Braves, assisted by Casey Stengel's Stooges from Brooklyn, ushered in Boston's National League season here this afternoon.

The atmospheric prediction had been cloudy with rain, but the madness couldn't have been more perfect for baseball.

Headed by Gov. Joseph B. Ely, Mayor Mansfield and their staffs, a crowd estimated at 12,000 turned out to greet the warriors in their home debut. The dignitaries occupying the gaily bedecked boxes, runing from one players' bench to the other, were kept busier than if they had remained at their daily tasks, between performing the traditional opening day ceremonies and posing for photographers, who appeared to outnumber the cash customers.

The governor and mayor along with Judge Fuchs, Tribal "prexy," and Bob Quinn, business manager of the Dodgers, led the parade to the right field flagpole. Managers McKechnie and Stengel raised Old

Dickens' Letters Bare Heart Woes

What Has Gone Before

In yesterday's instalment of Charles Dickens' love letters to Maria Beadnell, his boyhood sweetheart, he was revealed to be in the throes of a quarrel with her, apparently precipitated by Mary Anne Leigh, a girl friend of both.

Apparently Miss Leigh, envious of Maria, wanted Dickens for herself and told tales to Maria that caused a rift between the young lovers. The sarcastic letter Dickens wrote to Miss Leigh and the letter he wrote to Maria about the same time are presented in today's instalment.

By H. H. HARPER

YOUNG CHARLES DICKENS was certainly of the opinion that Marianne Leigh, often called Mary Anne, plotted to break up the love affair between himself and Maria Beadnell. Her apparent object was to win Dickens for herself.

And so he wrote Marianne a masterpiece of studied sarcasm. Perhaps it was more cruel than she deserved, but the reader must remember that it was intended for the eyes of Maria, as well as those of Marianne. It read:

Dear Miss Leigh:

I am very happy to avail myself of the opportunity of inclosing your Album (which I regret to say, want of a Moment's time has quite prevented me writing in). To say a very few words relative to an observation made by you the other day to one of the Miss Beadnells I believe—and which has only I regret to say just reached my ears quite accidently.

I should not have noticed it at all were it merely an idle gossiping remark, for one is necessarily compelled to hear so many of them and they are usually so trifling and so ridiculous that it w'd be mere waste of time to notice them in any way.

The remark to which I allude however is one which if it had the slightest foundation in truth—w'd so strongly tend to

Wire Your Congressman to Sign Petition for McLeod Bill

A NEW petition, designed to defeat the quibbling and technicalities that have blocked consideration of the McLeod bank pay-off bill, was introduced in Congress yesterday and should have the earnest support of every citizen.

Telegraph to your representative and urge him to respond to the will of the people by becoming one of the 145 signers necessary to make this petition effective.

When 145 Congressmen sign the petition, the bill will be taken out of the rules committee and brought onto the floor of the House for a showdown.

CALL FOR THAT SHOWDOWN NOW.

M'LEOD BANK BILL BATTLE IN CONGRESS SET FOR MAY 14

Michigan Congressman Heads New Petition to Force Depositors' Pay Off Measure to Vote on Floor

By International News Service

Washington, April 24 (INS)—Supporters of the McLeod bill to "thaw" deposits in closed banks through the RFC were driving today toward a vote on the measure in the House on May 14.

Having failed in their efforts to bring the measure to a vote yesterday, the backers were seeking signatures to a petition to discharge the rules committee from consideration of an application for preferred status for the bill.

McLEOD CONFIDENT

Rep. McLeod (R) of Michigan, predicted the necessary 145 signatures would be obtained within a few days.

"They cannot keep us from getting a vote on May 14 if we complete the petition, and we expect to do it," said McLeod. "The vote in the House yesterday was not a test on the measure. Many Democrats came to me and said they were for the bill but they did not want to vote to set aside a ruling of the speaker."

Catching the leaders by surprise, the McLeod supporters as soon as the House convened challenged the validity of a report by the banking committee on the bill. Rep. Beedy, of Maine, charged the committee by submitting "an illegal and irregular report," was merely trying to block a vote on the bill. He moved the report be declared void.

If the report had not been submitted, the House would have been forced to vote yesterday.

Speaker Rainey upheld Beedy's privilege to bring up the question, but Rep. Byrns, of Tennessee, House floor leader, moved to lay the Beedy motion on the table.

On a roll call, the House voted 227 to 122 to table the motion. By this indirect method it declined to consider the bill to aid millions of distressed depositors.

VOTE FAVORS BILL

Democratic leaders fought to make it a partisan issue, while McLeod forces have tried to keep all politics out of the matter.

The result showed 212 Democrats and 15 Republicans voting to table the motion, and 38 Democrats, 80 Republicans and four Farmer-Laborites against it. A vote against tabling, in effect, was a vote for the McLeod bill.

Harry Joe Brown Pays $5000 Balm

Los Angeles, April 24 (AP)—A check for $5000 and court costs brought to an end today the breach of promise suit of Marjorie Whiteis, film actress, against Harry Joe Brown, director and producer.

Miss Whiteis had sued Brown for $100,000 and had obtained a judgment for $5000 after claiming he jilted her at the end of a four-year romance to marry Sally Eilers, screen player, last fall. Her lawyer, Whitney Smith, said a check had been received in payment of the judgment. Miss Whiteis is known on the screen as Marjorie Gay.

fully guarded. Every passing automobile is searched.

Dillinger has dyed his hair red and has otherwise disguised himself, but a detailed description of the outlaw in his new makeup is in the hands of every police officer.

There is little likelihood that Dillinger will be taken alive. The grim-faced government man-hunters, whose ranks have been decimated by the bullets from the machine guns of Dillinger and his gang, have orders to shoot first and ask questions afterward.

"Shoot to kill" are the orders that have gone forward from Washington, where even the White House is following the swift-moving drama of the north country.

ROOSEVELT ACTS

While the Dillinger hunt is on, President Roosevelt, himself, has urged on Congressional leaders the immediate passage of several bills drawn by the attorney general with the object of strengthening the government's hand in its war on killers of the Dillinger type.

Every resource of the government has been placed at the disposal of those in charge of the hunt for Dillinger.

Government airplanes kept up a ceaseless criss-crossing of the skies above the snow covered forests in which Dillinger and his band are believed to have fled after they shot their way out of a trap, Sunday night, leaving a trail of dead and dying in their wake.

SEARCH IS WIDE-SPREAD

The government forces are not underestimating the resourcefulness of the Indiana desperado. While they believe he is in the north woods, yet there is the possibility that he has eluded the cordon of advancing guns and may be in St. Paul, Minneapolis or even Chicago and another small army of officers are on the alert in these cities.

The belief that Dillinger may be in one of the Twin Cities arose after the skirmish which three men had yesterday with three deputy sheriffs in St. Paul Park, a suburb of St. Paul. One of the men may have been Dillinger.

The deputies, who had been guarding the roads in the search for the Dillinger mob, exchanged shots when they encountered the trio in a small automobile bearing Wisconsin license plates. Here again fortune smiled on Dillinger—if Dillinger it was.

A lumbering truck, coming in from a side street delayed the deputies' machine just long enough to permit the trio to escape. One of their number, however, was believed to have been wounded.

ANOTHER BELIEVED SLAIN

There were also rumors that the Dillinger gang, which apparently split into two groups after the Sunday night gun fights near Mercer, lost another man in the gunfire in the Wisconsin woods. The rumor had it that the victim's body had been carried away in the woods—in which some investigators believe the Mooresville, Ind., "bad boy" had gone into hiding.

After the gun battle in the streets of the St. Paul suburb the police investigated reports that a car which sped past the city limits had contained a man bundled in blankets. Officer believe this may have been one of their foes in the gun fight—wounded or dead. They pointed out that if he had been killed, his comrades could have disposed of his body in one of the many lakes that dot the countryside or that they could have dispatched it to an ignominious valhalla in a swamp.

Activity increased along the Wisconsin-Michigan border with the statement of Lieut. O. E. Dearest that a car at Ironwood believed to have been used by the fleeing mobsmen had been found in a ditch near Moreniseo.

WOMEN TAKEN AWAY

The women the criminals deserted at the inn when they beat their retreat were spirited out of the Eagle River jail last night under a heavy guard and started for an undisclosed destination. The girls flippantly declined to yield any information concerning their erstwhile escorts, according to authorities who put them through an extensive questioning.

Werner Hanni, Department of Justice chief in the St. Paul area, returned to his headquarters last night. He declined to discuss the case.

Assistant United States Attorney General Joseph B. Keenan spurred the marksmen participating in the manhunt with this statement issued in Washington:

"We will get them!"

Dillinger has undergone some decided changes in appearance since he broke from jail last March 3. Emil Wanatka, owner of the resort where the gun fight occurred, said that Dillinger's hair had been dyed a bright red. It used to be light brown.

Two of the four men shot down when Dillinger and his followers fled the little Bohemia Lodge on Spider Lake, Wis., near Mercer, were not expected to recover. They are Carl C. Christensen, a constable at Spider Lake, and John Morris, a Civilian Conservation Corps cook. J. C. Newman, a federal agent, and John Hoffman, oil station attendant, also were wounded.

Killed outright in the shooting were Federal Operative Baum and Eugene Boisoneau, a specialist in the civilian conservation camps.

HUSBAND AMAZED AT GLORIA SWANSON'S DIVORCE PLAN

COURT BATTLE LOOMS OVER THEIR BABY

"My Feeling Is Unchanged," Says Farmer

By International News Service.

Paris, April 24 (INS)—Although he tacitly admitted yesterday that he had separated from Gloria Swanson, Michael Farmer was surprised and visibly affected today to learn the American screen star had announced she was going to divorce him.

Farmer discussed separation and divorce in a matter-of-fact tone with International News Service yesterday. Last night in New York, Miss Swanson, commenting on this, announced plans for a divorce. Today, hearing about the announcement, Farmer was more than a little amazed.

"One never knows," Farmer said slowly, with voice quivering, "whether one is married or divorced when he is wed to a movie star."

He paused, thought a minute, and then asked:

"Are you sure this is true?" It's the first intimation I have had of divorce."

HIS FEELINGS UNCHANGED

"My feelings toward Gloria," Farmer declared, "are the same as ever, although naturally I would not fight divorce proceedings.

"I have heard before that she had been quoted as saying I had too much leisure, but she always denied this to me."

This was a reference to Miss Swanson's comment last night upon learning Farmer planned a world cruise.

"If Gloria actualy announced her intentions to obtain a divorce," Farmer continued, "that presents an entirely new aspect to the whole affair.

"I really do not know what to do, since everything depends on her, even whether I return to America, and when."

Farmer paused before answering the next question, and made the reply slowly, not to say cryptically:

"I do still love her? Just say that my felings are the same as ever."

New York, April 24—A court battle for the possession of their baby daughter is believed in the offing between Gloria Swanson, beautiful film star and her Irish playboy husband, Michael Farmer.

Miss Swanson refused to comment on dispatches from Paris in which Farmer said that he would bring their daughter, Bridget Michelis, to Paris and keep her with him.

"After all, Michael is a gentleman, and I don't believe that he will keep my baby," she said. "A mother is always the best person to look after a child's welfare, and he knows that I have tried to bring up my other daughter, Gloria, as carefully as possible."

A close adviser said that Miss Swanson would probably bring charges of incompatibility in her divorce charges, stating:

"I do not believe that Farmer, who knows how hard Miss Swanson has worked to support her children, could inflict the unhappiness of trying to take little two-year-old Bridget from her."

The trouble between Farmer and Miss Swanson started last Christmas. Michael, who had never missed a season at St. Moritz, wanted to join Douglas Fairbanks there for the winter sports. Gloria did not feel she could leave Hollywood and the motion picture offers that had been made for her.

She urged him to remain with her until she had settled her plans one way or another, but he chafed at the bit and finally left California and his wife of only three years at their home in Beverly Hills to spend Christmas alone.

Miss Swanson is now in New York making personal appearances.

Marital Craft Wrecked

Gloria Swanson, film star now in New York, announced that she will bring suit for divorce from Michael Farmer, Irish playboy husband, as soon as she returned to Hollywood. She will also fight to retain custody of her baby. The break is blamed over Michael's desire for a good time while Miss Swanson devoted her efforts to her career. Boynton Is Fine Name for Bornstein, Boyntons Say

Looking at it from the Bornsteins' angle, Leo Aaron Bornstein, 32-year-old Lexington junk dealer, is in for a bit of tough sledding and rough riding by the family before he gets his name changed to Boynton.

Yet the Boyntons of Lexington and elsewhere apparently don't mind loaning their name to the young junkman, who yesterday filed a petition in Middlesex probate court to be allowed the name Leo Aaron Boynton.

Bornstein said in his petition that his name is a constant source of confusion by reason of the fact that there are so many other Bornsteins in the town, but if you leave it to Leo's four sisters and three brothers, it is Leo who is confused.

One of the brothers, Jack Bornstein, even came right out in open meeting today and declared that he should have his head examined.

"The whole family thinks he must be out of his head to want to drop the name of Bornstein," asserted Jack wrathfully.

However, the Boyntons themselves took the matter very calmly.

"We don't mind," said Mrs. J. H. Boynton of Lexington. "Others in the town have the name and if it suits him, all right. At least he's picking a good one."

Mrs. Alvah B. Boynton of Belmont st., Watertown, commented almost in the same words.

"I don't know what harm it will do anyone if Mr. Bornstein has decided to change his name," she said.

"At least he has seen fit to select a good American name. If he is allowed to change his name to Boynton, I have no objection. It will be truly American."

Apparently unmindful of the storm in his own household, Leo, who operates his firm under the name of the Arlington-Belmont Junk Co., was out along the highways somewhere today, trading as usual.

MURTON CALLS NORMA TO AID HIS BATTLE

Bride Enjoys Liberty Out in Jail Yard in the Sunshine

By RUTH MUGGLEBEE
Boston Evening American Staff Correspondent

Dedham Courthouse, April 24—Surprising as it may be, Norma Millen received two dollars from Norfolk County to serve as a witness at the trial of her husband, Murton, next Monday.

With the money she received a subpoena, served on her by Deputy Sheriff Edward Downes, at the request of her husband's counsel, George S. Harvey.

The subpoena, Norma took with her to her cell, the two dollars, she turned over to the desk officer of the jail to be credited to her account for the payment of outside meals and delicacies.

The legal document, the second of its kind that she has received, calls for Norma's appearance in court next Monday, at which time defense counsel hope to make use of her as a witness in behalf of her husband.

Shortly after supper last night Norma, recovered from her trying and tearful reunion with her husband, was called to the rotunda.

"What, again?" she smilingly asked her jailer.

She had had three visitors during the day—her grey-haired mother and her father and her associate counsel, Hartley C. Cutter. The reason for the fourth visit was a bit puzzling.

She recognized the deputy as she approached him and smiled:

"Hello."

"Here's a ticket for you," the deputy told her facetiously.

"A ticket?" Norma was a bit non-plussed as he held out a paper folded three ways.

THANKS COURT AID

"Yes, a ticket—you know a subpoena to appear in court next Monday—the same as you had before," the court attache replied.

"Oh, thank you," Murton's wife smiled.

At the same time the deputy sheriff gave her the two dollars—the witness fee that always accompanies service of a subpoena.

Norma spent a happy day yesterday. She was out of doors with the other women prisoners, reading at times, sewing at other intervals.

Her father, the Rev. Norman Brighton of Natick, cut short his visit to enable his daughter "to enjoy as much sunshine as she can."

Mrs. Brighton stayed more than an hour with Norma. The middle-aged woman said she had read of Norma's hysterical reaction to her meeting with her husband that she thought it "wise" to come to Dedham and "talk it over" with her daughter.

NORMA DISAPPOINTED

When she left Norma she said that Murton's wife was sadly disappointed over the meeting.

"We couldn't say anything that we wanted to say or talk about the things we wanted to—Mr. Ferrari listened to everything," Mrs. Brighton quoted her daughter's conversation to her.

Norma continued to tell her how upset she was over the entire epis de.

It was only a few minutes later that Norma arrived at the jail, bringing with him a pair of white sneakers.

"Norma finds it difficult to walk around the jail yard in the high heels of her pumps," the reminder explained, "and she asked me to bring her a pair of sneakers—something that would be easy on her feet."

Norma Talmadge Again Tries Love

Denial after denial was made by Norma Talmadge, actress and ex-wife of Joseph H. Schenck, that she intended marrying George Jessel, the stage and radio comic, but once Norma came east after her divorce, the couple lost no time in scurrying down to Atlantic City and utilizing a license. Mayor Harry Bacharach of Atlantic City married the noted couple—and here the three are after the deed was done yesterday.

FIRE NEAR HOME OF BRIGHTONS

Fire early today drove out a family a few doors away from the home of the Rev. Norman Brighton, father of Norma Millen, in East Natick.

The fire was in the home of William Bowman and was caused by the explosion of an oil heater. Bowman, his wife and three-months-old twins were driven to the street. Neighbors extinguished the flames with a garden hose before the arrival of the firemen. The Rev. Mr. Brighton did not participate in the work of the volunteer firemen.

111 WARSHIPS TAX CANAL

By Associated Press

Balboa, C. Z., April 24—A steady stream of United States navy warships still moved through the Panama Canal today in the procession maintained for 24 hours past.

The transit of 111 warships, which began at 5:11 a. m. yesterday, was not completed in the 24 hours suggested before the maneuver began, but the completion appeared probable before nightfall.

All commercial shipping was tied up and some 20 vessels were awaiting an opportunity to get across the isthmus.

First Mackerel of Season Docks

Gloucester seiner St. Theresa, Capt. Phillip Filetto, arrived at the Fish Pier, South Boston today with 38,000 pounds of mackerel, the first catch docked at this pier this season.

The fish, consisting of 30,000 pounds of small and 8000 pounds of large and medium mackerel, was caught Sunday, 72 miles south of Cape May, N. J.

Woman Burned in Oil Stove Blast

Jewelry valued at $1600 was stolen from the parked car of Edward W. Kirby of Belmont today, while he was talking with the manager of a jewelry store at 5 Dartmouth st., Malden sq., Malden.

JESSEL'S GAY AFTER BRIDAL

By Associated Press.

Atlantic City, N. J., April 24—Norma Talmadge, star of the silent screen, now is Mrs. George Jessel.

She and the stage comedian were married at the Hotel Ambassador late yesterday after keeping the wedding plans a secret since last Thursday when they obtained a marriage license.

"I'm Mrs. Jessel now, all right," said Miss Talmadge after the ceremony, "and I love it."

"I've never been so happy in my life." Jessel said over and over after kissing Mayor Harry Bacharach, who performed the ceremony, and everyone in sight."

Less than a month ago Miss Talmadge obtained a Mexican divorce from Joseph Schenck, the producer.

For two years the former movie actress and Jessel had been denying reports they would wed.

The couple will remain here until Friday, when Jessel begins a week's vaudeville engagement in New York. After that, he said, they will go to Florida.

Miss Talmadge, all smiles, darted to a telephone immediately after the ceremony to talk to her sisters, Constance and Natalie, in California.

"Am I happy?" she yelled. "Do you think I would have done it unless I was sure I would be happy?"

Leary Missing at Trial for Larceny

Atty. John F. Leary, former secretary of the Medford schoolhouse building commission, under indictments charging larcenies totaling $7814.90, failed to appear in Middlesex superior court today when his name was called for trial on the indictments.

At the request of Dist.-Atty Frederic Crafts, Judge Raoul H. Beaudreau delayed the issuance of capias for Leary's arrest, Crafts stating that he expected Leary would surrender voluntarily for trial tomorrow.

Dean Briggs of Harvard Dead in Milwaukee

Le Baron Russell Briggs, for a quarter of a century dean of Harvard College, and beloved by three generations of Harvard students, died today at the home of his daughter, Lucia Russell Briggs, president of Downer College, in Milwaukee.

Dean Briggs was 79 years of age and his death was caused by a heart ailment. His home is at 6 Ash, st., Cambridge.

For 50 years Dean Briggs was closely identified with Harvard. During his busy life in the college, he also found time to serve as president of Radcliffe College, acting in that capacity from 1902 to 1922, although he did not let his duties there interfere with his Harvard activities.

CHAMPIONED ATHLETICS

Dean Briggs resigned in 1925, although in the succeeding years he kept in touch with the life of the college and was a familiar figure on the campus.

While among Harvard men, Dean Briggs was best known for the office he held in the faculty, the country at large knew Dean Briggs best for his activity in intercollegiate athletic circles.

For many years he was chairman of the Harvard athletic committee. His ideals regarding college sports were always of the highest and he used every effort to place athletic collegiate competition on a plane in accordance with these ideals.

He was a constant and hitter foe of professionalism or anything that bordered on it in collegiate competition; he loved athletics for sport's sake.

Dean Briggs always held that it was possible for an athlete to be as great in defeat as in victory.

Ada Louis Comstock, who succeeded Dean Briggs as president of Radcliffe, said:

"The shock of President Briggs' death is so great that it is impossible at this time to put into words his service to Radcliffe College or the devotion which Radcliffe women have felt for him.

"He was a unique person, loved and venerated to a degree not easily matched in the history of the administration of colleges."

PROSECUTOR LAYS 2 NEEDHAM KILLINGS TO MURTON MILLEN

DEWING, IN OPENING SPEECH, OUTLINES STATE'S CASE

Weapons Stolen from Police Exhibit, He Tells Jury, Then Details His Version of Double Slaying

Dedham Courthouse, April 24—Dist. Atty. Edmund R. Dewing in his opening address at the Millen-Faber murder trial today, named Murton Millen as the machine-gunner who mowed down Patrolmen Forbes McLeod and Frank O. Haddock in the Needham Trust Co. holdup.

As soon as Judge Nelson P. Brown took the bench, Dewing started his address. Turning to the jury he said:

"We will satisfy you that the weapons used were stolen from the Mechanics Building police exhibit and that the robbery was planned in the apartment of the defendant Murton Millen at 1175 Boylston st., by these three defendants," the district attorney promised.

Rapidly he sketched the drama of the crime—how the three pulled up in front of the bank at about 9:30 a. m. How Irving Millen "with vile language" demanded that Guard Bartholomew open the gates to the vault—how a girl saw and heard him and dropped to the floor to press the vault alarm button.

And how, McLeod, turning to answer the summons to duty, was cut down as bullets from the gun intended for use of his brothers crashed through the glass of the bank window.

"Murt Millen went to the window and was heard to say, 'Here comes a cop,' and a voice was heard to call from the center, 'get him!'

DEWING CONTINUED

"The machine gun was heard working."

The terrible wounds suffered by McLeod were described in some detail by Dewing.

"Two of the bullets will be submitted to you as exhibits," said the prosecutor.

Faber got the money and "yelled for the big money," said Dewing.

PICTURES TWO KILLINGS

Bank Officers Arnold McIntosh and John D. Riordan were ordered onto the running board of the car for the getaway. Murton got behind the wheel with the machine gun on the front seat beside him, Faber and Irving Millen occupied the back seat, Dewing continued.

McIntosh was the first to drop off the car and shots were fired at him. Riordan dropped off a little farther on.

"We will show you this machine came down Highland ave. and as it approached Murton Millen said, 'There's a cop ahead,' and thereupon Murt took up the machine gun on the front seat side of him while driving—we will show you he was an experienced driver—operated that machine gun. The bullets struck Officer Haddock, two bullets, and two others struck Coughlin—and the bandits continued on their way.

"You heard yesterday the indictment returned by the grand jury, charging the three defendants with murder of Forbes A. McLeod in Needham on February 2nd.

LINKS MURDER AND HOLDUP

"I'm going to go into detail in some instances. You are going to sit here as jurors listening to this testimony that will last several weeks. It may be tiresome at times but I can assure you every witness plays a certain part in the story the government will present.

"The statute defines murder as the killing of a person with deliberately premeditated malice aforethought. The state says that the killing of a person while in the commission of a crime punishable by life imprisonment or death is murder.

"We're going to show you that when the murder occurred these three defendants were in the act of robbing the Needham Trust Co. The story of the government will go back into January when we will satisfy you the weapons used were stolen from the Mechanics Building police exhibit; that the robbery was planned in the apartment of the defendant, Murton, 1175 Boylston st., Boston, by these three defendants who went out and looked over the location of the bank.

"We will satisfy you that at 9:30 on Feb. 2 they went to Needham in a Packard car and that that car was owned by a certain woman in Boston and last seen by her when she left it outside the Statler last October.

PICTURES ROBBERY, KILLING

"We will satisfy you that the car was operated by Murton Millen. We will show you the car drove up in front of the Needham Trust Company; that one defendant went inside the vestibule.

"You will recall the swinging doors. One defendant went in and he will be pointed out to you by one of the witnesses.

"Each of the three went to certain positions in the bank: one to the cage at the left, and spoke to Riordan, one of the tellers; told him to turn around and stick up his hands or something to that effect.

"Faber stood at the first table in the center of the bank on the right hand side and we will show he stood at about the position here (pointing to map) at right of table and midway towards counter on his right. We will further show that Irving Millen went from the cage of Riordan to the grillwork door towards the vault and shot Guard Bartholomew sitting at a table.

"We will satisfy you that Irving demanded the gates be open and used vile language.

"We will satisfy you that about this time a young lady sitting in the bookkeeping room looking through the glass part of the upper door observed the man standing near Faber and Irving Millen; saw the gun; heard vile language and she stooped down in front of that door and pressed the little button. The gong rang outside the bank.

HEARD DEATH SHOTS

"We will show you gentlemen that Murt Millen with a machine gun in his hand went inside of the gate toward the desk of Mr. McIntosh, the treasurer. Miss Kimball was sitting on a chair by the desk. She will tell you she went into the conference room when she saw these men. She saw Millen enter with a machine gun in his hand, and push the desk aside.

"Murt Millen went near the window and, she will testify, she heard him say, 'here comes a cop,' and heard a voice call out from the center, 'Get him.' She heard the machine gun working.

"We will show you through the operation of the gun through glass that bullets struck McLeod, who was crossing the tracks. We will show you he fell on the track nearest the bank. We will show you that here several bullets struck Officer McLeod.

"We will show that a man named Vincent saw McLeod roll over from side to side, that his knees were drawn up to his stomach. Vincent ran over from his truck and tried to help McLeod; asked him if he could get up and McLeod mumbled what sounded like 'no.'

HOW McLEOD DIED

"McLeod was a man who weighed about 230 pounds. Two other men assisted Vincent in picking him up. He was taken to the Glover Hospital. There two wounds were found in his abdomen and two in his right side. We will present Dr. Fred Stanwood, medical examiner of Wellesley. He will tell you that McLeod died within an hour of the shooting. He will tell you over half of his right kidney was destroyed, the lower part of liver torn away, two sections of the intestines destroyed and the spleen scraped.

"Two bullets went through his body, one was found in his coat and will be shown here. Another bullet went through and took off the top of his right lung. That bullet was recovered and will be shown to you.

"We will show that those two bullets were fired from the machine gun in the hands of Murton Millen and we will produce the gun that fired them.

"We will show that Faber fired the shotgun which wounded Bartholomew in the hand and spattered the grill work in the bank.

DEMANDED 'BIG MONEY'

"We will show that Irving Millen went to Reardon's cage in the bank and demanded the money; that Reardon pointed to a box which was empty; that Faber threw the box back after he picked it up; that Reardon then pointed to a drawer and that Faber took the money from it.

"We will show you that Faber then shouted he wanted the big money, the pay roll money. That they went over to Whidden's cage and that Whidden was not there and the cage was locked. That someone shouted 'smash the glass,' and that Reardon assisted Irving in breaking down the partition.

"We will show you that Irving went in and picked up the pay roll money, placed it on the counter to be picked up by Faber and then climbed out over the counter, taking Reardon with him.

"We will show you that Murton came back from the window after firing the machine gun and killing McLeod. He still carried the machine gun and took McIntosh with him out to the car. McIntosh was placed on the front right running board and Reardon on the rear of the board and the car driven by Murton started off in the direction of Wellesley.

"The car passed the Needham Co-operative Bank to Maple st. and there Reardon either jumped or fell off the car. That a shot was fired at Reardon as he fell, but did not strike him.

"The car proceeded at a moderate rate of speed along Oak st., past the Glover Hospital, went over the railroad tracks and down Mellen st. to the fire station still at a moderate rate of speed. We will show you that at the fire station, another officer, Haddock, was standing talking to Lieut. Saloon of the fire department and that another fireman, Coughlin, was standing a little in the rear.

"We will show that this machine, driven by Murton, approached the fire station going slowly and that Murton said 'there's a cop ahead.' That he reached for the machine gun there beside him on the front seat. Irving and Faber were in the rear seat.

"Murton, we will show, picked up the machine gun and while he guided the car with one hand he fired the machine gun with his right hand. He is an expert driver, we will show. Two bullets struck Coughlin and two struck Haddock.

"The car continued on its way after the shooting. McIntosh was still on the running board. Further down Highland ave. McIntosh either fell or jumped off the car.

TUNE IN ON ALARM

"These three men then proceeded down Highland ave. to the Worcester turnpike. There was a radio in the car. They switched it on and they heard the broadcast of the holdup. Then they changed the number plates and went through West Roxbury to the Brinsley st. garage. They took the guns out with the exception of the machine gun, got into another car and drove to the Lawrence ave. home of the Millens where the money was divided between the three men, about three or four thousand apiece.

"They took the machine gun into the house wrapped in a cloth. Faber then went to his which the Millen brothers were interested. They spent the day there.

"Two days later Faber gave a certain person money to hold for him. We will produce that money and show that it was Faber's share of the money stolen from the Needham bank.

"We will also prove that on the following Tuesday night, about 9:30, the three defendants got into the car used in the crime and drove from Brinsley st. with Faber driving. That they were followed by another car.

"That they took a can of gasoline and when they reached Lily Pond ave. in Norwood they set fire to the first car. That they took off the plates and threw them in the bushes. That they left the scene in the car that had followed.

HOLDS DEATH SHELLS

"We will satisfy you that certain articles found in the burning shell of the car were shells used in the robbery of the Needham Trust Company.

"We will produce these shells that were used in the Needham hold-up. Then we will move to the investigation by the police. We will show that on the day after the finding of the burned car that the battery was removed and taken to different places for examination. That identification marks were made the following week.

"We will show that exactly one week after the murder, Murton and his wife went to New York and on Saturday met Saul Messinger, a school chum of Murton's. That he met Saul Messinger again on the following day, Sunday morning.

"Messinger will tell you what Murton said to him about his whereabouts and what he did on February 2, the day of the murder. We will show by this witness that all three defendants were at the scene of the murder on that day."

STATE POLICE GET BUSY

"Let me go back further in the investigation on the battery, which was still going on here in Boston on Saturday, Feb. 10," prosecutor continued.

"We will establish that on the date upon taking the battery apart there were certain separators different from other separators.

"We will show you, gentlemen, that in a Boston newspaper there appeared a certain statement reporting that such a battery had been found, that as a result of seeing that statement in the paper, two men named Le Verge went to the police, and talked with a certain police official. That as a result of what he said the state police had a talk with the Le Verges brothers.

"We will show you from testimony that the two Millens took that battery found in the car burned at Norwood into the Le Verge shop and that the Le Verges put new separators into the battery. They will tell you why:

"We will further show you, gentlemen, that on the following day, or that night, Murton and Irving Millen had a telephone conversation. Murton was in New York. Irving was in Boston. Murton had talked to somebody who knew what the Le Verges had said about the battery.

IN BOSTON BANK.

"We will show you that that night, Murton Millen returned from New York and went to the

BANKER ON STAND POINTS TO MURTON IN M'LEOD SLAYING

GIRL WHO DARED BANDIT GUN TO GIVE ALARM IS WITNESS

By WIN BROOKS

opening, the state called four witnesses, one a girl, before the noon recess. One of these, Arnold McIntosh, treasurer of the robbed bank, who was snatched as hostage during the getaway, pointed as accusing identifying finger at Murton Millen as the man who ordered him to the car after the holdup.

So, within two hours after the state had opened, one of the three prisoners was definitely placed in evidence at the scene of the crime, a participant in it.

"MAN IN THE MIDDLE"

"The one in the middle," said McIntosh, coolly, pointing towards the prisoners' cage, where Murton sat handcuffed between his younger brother and Faber.

Murton, his eyelids drooping, grimaced—that is, his mouth tightened and one corner of it was drawn down. He stared at the bank treasurer.

Mary Gaykan, bookkeeper at the bank, who dropped to the floor and sounded the vault alarm that summoned McLeod to his duty and his death, testified briefly, obviously ill at ease.

"I heard loud talking and walked to the door of the bookkeeping room," she said. "I saw a man with the gun, I stooped down below the window and pushed the bell. I heard the gong ring outside."

"And what did you do then?" she was asked.

"I crawled under my desk and stayed there," she said. "I heard a gun go off."

In sentences clipped short, under the questioning of the prosecutor, McIntosh told of his experience at the hands of the bandits who descended on his bank at 9:30 in the morning of Feb. 2 and, find the scene a few minutes later with $14,500, leaving two policemen dead, the bank guard and a fireman, Timothy Coughlin, wounded.

"I was sitting at my desk dictating when I noticed a man outside the railing with a gun. I saw him wave the gun and say, 'Hands up!' I put my hands up and sat in the chair for one or two seconds.

"The man had a mask on. I did nothing until I was told to turn around and face the wall by a man in the middle of the room with a shotgun. I faced the wall until I was taken by the shoulder roughly and told to 'come on.'

"GET THE CO!"

"Before I turned to face the wall I heard a shotgun and saw it fired from the center of the floor. I saw it fired and the man who operated it eject the shell. Next I heard a shot from the conference room after I heard someone yell 'Here comes the cop' and the man in the middle of the floor had answered, 'Get Him!'

Hartley L. White of Braintree, Norfolk county engineer, who identified maps, and Sergt. Walter L. Tompkins, state police photographer who identified photographs of the bank interior, were the other two morning witnesses.

Into Murton Millen's hands—figuratively of course—Dist. Atty. Dewing in his smash opening place the gibbering machine gun which was stolen from the state police exhibit at the Boston automobile show in Mechanics building and used during the crime.

"I shall show you to your satisfaction, gentlemen," he promised the jury, "that the three defendants went to the Needham Trust Co. on Feb. 2 to commit robbery. They went prepared for anything.

"THERE TO SHOOT OUT"

"They went there determined to rob and they were determined they would not be caught alive.

"They went there prepared to shoot their way out and they did shoot it out. But there was something they forgot about. We will show that these three defendants are the ones who went to Needham and shot Forbes A. McLeod down in cold blood."

Of Norma, he said, with reference to the burning of the crime car in Norwood:

"We will prove that they were followed to the scene by another car driven by the wife of the defendant Morton and that they left the scene in the car driven by the wife of Murton."

The trio of prisoners, under close guard in the crowded room, heard the district attorney's opening without display of emotion.

At the finish of Dewing's opening, the first government witnesses were sworn by Clerk Worthington. They were Tompkins, White, Miss Kaykan, McIntosh, Walter Bartholomew, Harold Vincent, a Needham fireman; Lieut. William Salome of the Needham fire department and George Anderson, Needham carpenter.

Judge Brown ruled the witnesses must be excluded from court until called to testify, the only exceptions being members of the defendants' families and police.

A jammed courtroom, which included among the spectators Patrolman Haddock's widow and Norma's father, Rev. Norman Brighton, watched the county prosecutor point an impersonal accusing finger at the trio shackled in the defendants' cage.

3 PRISONERS' REACTIONS

Irving Millen sat with his chin in his hand, watching intently, listening.

Murton grimaced as he gazed at the small, dapperly-clad figure walking up and down in front of the jury.

Faber sat with his eyes closed, his chin on his chest, his head bobbing—and he did not know whether he heard.

Outside the courthouse a large crowd was gathered, hopeful of getting seats for the opening of the testimony. A single line formed at the High st. front entrance and extended around the corner of Court st. for a distance of 200 feet or more. Once the throng attempted to storm the gates and was driven back by court troopers. It was the first crowd evidence of the intense public interest in the case.

Dewing: The witness points to Murton Millen in the cage.

Murton blinked rapidly as he watched the witness. He gave no other sign. Irving just stared and Faber's eyes remained closed.

Q—What did you do then? A—I started to go. At the door I hesitated. I was pushed roughly and again the man said "come on!"

Q—Who was with you? A—Mr. Reardon was with me and two other men.

Q—Where did you and Reardon go? A—We went to the car in front of the bank. Reardon stood on the front of the right running board. I stood at the rear on the same side.

Q—Did you observe who was operating the car? A—I did not.

Q—Did you observe the three defendants when you got out of the bank. A—Yes.

Q—Did you see what they did when you got outside the bank? (Attorney Scharton objected and the court excluded the question).

Q—What did they do? (The judge excluded it).

Q—How many bandits did you see out there? A—Three.

MAN WITH THE MONEY

Q—Tell us what you saw any of the three defendants do? (Atty. Harvey objected. The court ruled that the witness might state what he is required to do.)

Q—Can you tell us what any of the defendants did?

Judge—He may be asked if he recognizes any of the men he saw outside the bank."

Q—Did you recognize any of the men outside the bank? A—No.

Q—Who came out of the bank with you? A—The man who did not have a shotgun, Mr. Riordan and the other two.

Q—Who else came out of the bank beside Mr. Riordan and the man who had you by the shoulder? A—The man who was carrying the cash. (The judge excluded the answer, after Atty. Scharton asked that it be stricken out).

Q—Who else came out? Whom else did you see? A—I saw a man with two boxes in his arms.

Q—Who else? A—Nobody else.

1—What did you see Mr. Riordan do? A—I saw him standing at the rear of the car.

Q—What did you see the man who had you by the shoulders do? A—He went around the car and got into the driver's seat.

Q—And what did you see the man who had the boxes do? A—He got into the car.

MACHINE GUN IN SEAT.

Q—Anybody else? A—The third man got in.

Q—Did you see anything inside the car?. A—Yes, a machine gun on the seat beside the driver.

Q—What happened to the car after you got on? A—It started immediately.

Q—Did anybody say anything to you as the car started forward? A—No.

Q—What direction did you proceed? A—Westerly on Great Plain ave. toward Wellesley.

Q—Show us where you went and what occurred? A—Mr. Riordan jumped off just beyond the cooperative bank.

The witness then took the pointer and using exhibit No. 4—a map described the flight route. He said the car turned on to Maple st, on to Oak st., on to Chestnut st. to Highland ave. and down Highland ave.

Q—Can you describe the speed of this car? A—It was going about 25 miles an hour, continuing about the same rate of speed down to Highland ave. to a point near the fire station.

Q—Did you observe anybody there as you approached the fire station? A—Yes.

Q—Whom? A—Officer Haddock was standing in front of the station. He was in a police officer's uniform.

KILLING OF HADDOCK

Q—You knew Officer Hadock? A—Yes, very well.

Q—What did you observe near the fire station? A—I observed that Officer Haddock was standing there. There were several men around him.

Q—As you approached them did you hear anything? A—Yes, as we approached I heard several shots.

Q—Coming from where? A—Inside the car.

Q—Did the car stop? A—No.

Q—What did they do next? A—The traffic signal was green and the car speeded up somewhat. It continued down Highland ave., crossed Webster st., and since there was no car in sight on either side, the car slowed down.

Q—What did you do? A—I jumped off.

Q—Did you see the car after that again? A—Yes.

Q—Where did you see it the next time? A—The next time I saw it was in the town stable, back of the bank.

Q—When was it you saw it again? A—About a week later. Q—See it again after that? A—Yes, several times.

Q—When was the last time? A—Three weeks ago.

Q—And what was its condition when you saw it the last time? A—The inside was burned beyond recognition and the glass was destroyed,

A court recess was taken at this point.

Police Carry 'Evidence' Into Court

THIS MACHINE GUN, IT IS CHARGED, RAINED DEATH

Crowds of curious watched today at Dedham courthouse when the deadly weapon declared to have killed Patrolman Forbes McLeod and Frank O. Haddock in the Needham bank holdup was carried in to be marked as an exhibit against the Millen brothers and Abe Faber by the state. (Picture by Boston Evening Staff Photographer.)

SIGNIFICANT ARTICLES IN A STRANGE ASSORTMENT

In peaceful pursuits, acetylene torches and radios are used, but the state charges that the articles here being carried into court had a sinister purpose in the hands of the three accused. There is also a cartridge belt shown in the photo.

TODAY'S TESTIMONY

Dedham Courthouse, April 24—Scenes of wild disorder, fear and heroism were re-enacted by bank witnesses today as they described the death-dealing raid on the Needham Trust Co., Feb. 8. One witness, unhesitantly, placed Murton Millen as a member of the raiding party.

Mrs. Mary Gaykans of Norfolk st., Needham, bookkeeper of the bank, was the first to testify.

Q. (By Dewing)—What attracted your attention at the bank on the morning of February second? A.—I heard loud talking. I went to the door to the bookkeeping room and saw a man standing in the lobby of the bank with a gun in his hand.

Q.—What did you do? A.—I rang the bell. Then I crawled under my desk.

Irving smiled broadly. Murton grimaced. Faber slept.

Q—Did you stay there long? A—Until they went out.

Q—Did you hear anything else? A—I heard a shot go off.

No cross examination.

Arnold McIntosh, treasurer of the Needham Trust Company, was the next witness. He testified he was at his desk in the front of the bank office at 9:30 a. m.

"I SAW HIM FIRE"

Q. What attracted your attention? A.—I saw a man standing just outside the rail with a gun in his hands. I was dictating letters to my Secretary, Miss Kimball.

Q.—What did the man with the gun do? A.—He waved it at me and said "Hands up." I put them up. I was still sitting in my chair. I sat that way about two seconds.

Q.—What happened then? A.—I saw the man with the gun walk down toward the rear.

Q—Did he wear a mask? A—Yes.

Q—What did Miss Kimball do? A—She stepped two paces into the conference room.

Q—What did you do? A—Nothing until I was told by a man with a shotgun to face the wall. Then I turned the chair around toward the wall. I stayed in that position about two minutes.

Q—Before that did you hear something? A—Yes, I saw the man with the shotgun rear and eject the shell.

"THERE'S THE MAN"

Q—What did you hear after you turned to the wall? A—I heard shots fired from the conference room.

Q—Did you hear any remarks made? A—Yes, someone yelled "here comes a cop!" Then the man with the shotgun shouted "get him!"

Q—Then came the reports of shots from the conference room? A—Yes.

Q—What happened then? A—A man came up and grabbed me by the shoulder; told me to come along.

Q—Do you know whom that man was? A—I do.

Q—Did you point to him here? A—Yes, he isthe man sitting in the middle there.

Butlers Bid in Best U. S. Liquor as Dealers Wail

This was "Jeeves'" day, it seemed, at Uncle Sam's seized liquor auction at the Appraisers' stores in Atlantic ave.

Anyhow, disgruntled wholesalers growled audible protests as lot after lot of fancy whiskies, cordials, and vintage champagnes were knocked down to private bidders at prices too high except for re-stocking of residential cellars.

There were several butler-like figures in the small group which evinced its determination to pay whatever might be necessary to obtain the pick of the choicer wet goods placed on the block.

There were a few well-known dealers, too, but they, their luckless competitors insisted, were buying on commission for individual —and wealthy—connoisseurs.

DEALERS GET BIG LOTS

The only good break, apparently, which was given the commercial bargain hunters was when large consignments of keg and barrel liquor were put on sale.

"Jeeves," quite plainly, wasn't interested in truckload lots. One Atlantic ave. jobber was able to buy hundreds of gallons at $5.75 plus a $2 tax.

But when smaller quantities and more distinguished qualities went under the hammer, "Jeeves" and his associates dug deep into well-lined pockets. Prices soared, in scores of instances, more than 50 per cent over the government's own appraisals.

A one-gallon demijohn of Baccardi rum, for instance, sold for $15.

HIGH PRICES PAID

A dozen bottles of Johnny Walker Scotch, started hopefully by a dealer at $15, were eventually knocked down for $40.50, with a $6 tax on top of that.

A single dusty bottle of Petite Chartreuse, started at $1, brought $4.50 from the final purchaser.

A dozen quarts of Seagram's Canadian rye were sold at $41, after spirited bidding by shoppers for private cellars.

More than 100,000 quarts of assorted liquors, in all, were up at auction. The stock was of contraband seized from bootleggers by revenue officers and coast guardsmen.

THREAT TO POOL PHONE GIRLS' STOCK MADE

Washington, April 24 (AP)—A threat to pool stock held by employes to "secure fair play" was voiced today at a hearing on a code for the telephone industry by Grace Barry, president of the Boston Telephone Operators Union.

Miss Barry said she represented 3000 organized telephone operators of the Bell System and asserted the organized telephone company employes held more than ten per cent of the total outstanding stock of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. She said they were considering the necessity of pooling their votes to secure fair play from the officers of the telephone company.

Miss Barry contended that 95 per cent of the employes she represented were stockholders in the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

She demanded a 30-hour week with a minimum wage of $15 per week for beginners, with graduated increases in weekly wages so that at the end of the fourth year telephone operators would be paid a minimum wage of not less than $30 per week. She said that through the installation of machine switching or dial phones many thousands of telephone operators had been deprived of positions which they had held for years. She added that unless the work week were shortened to 30 hours, many additional thousands of telephone operators would be added to those now unemployed.

BOY WINS TEST ON SUNDAY BALL

After all, a boy who plays baseball on a Sunday morning is not such a desperate character after all.

In the future, boys who engage in this pastime before noon need not fear police interference. And it's all because of a youngster who decided he would have the matter settled for once and all.

The youth, Haskell Allen, of Lanark rd., Brighton who made a test case of the Sunday baseball law, submitted to arrest on Sunday, April 15.

Driver Held When Crash Victim Dies

A few hours after an East Boston man died from injuries suffered in an accident last Friday, Thomas V. Kane, 50, of Clarke at., Wilmington, was arraigned in East Boston court today on charges of manslaughter, operating so as to endanger and driving with faulty brakes.

The victim, Howard S. Hunter, 61, of 81 Eutaw st., East Boston, died without regaining consciousness since the accident. According to police, a truck driven by Kane and a machine operated by Hunter collided on Border st., East Boston. Kane was released under $1000 bail for hearing May 1.

for a "go-getter" to prove his quality.

In December, Uncle Sam will have finished building a new, huge "burglar-proof" vault, big enough to hold all his gold, besides piles of silver and other valuables. The vault doors, of the toughest metal, thirty inches thick, are not the only protection. If a burglar succeeded in getting half way through the metal door, he would release a cloud of deadly gas, in which he would die in horrible agony.

There is an opportunity for John Dillinger.

Lord Tennyson's curlews, flying over Locksley Hall, were fortunate birds, living and flying in days before electric wiring.

In West Palm Beach, Fla., four curlews coming in contact with a high tension wire caught fire, and, with feathers burning, landed on dry grass, and started a blaze that threatened the southern part of the city. Firemen found one curlew, badly singed, with a broken wing, and are trying to cure it.

Congressman Rayburn, of Texas, is indignant, amazed, outraged to find fighting his bill to control the New York Stock Exchange "the most powerful lobby ever organized against any bill which ever came to Congress." Congressman Rayburn must remember that his bill is opposed by 1,000 wide-awake young and old men that make up the Stock Exchange membership, each owning a "seat" with value varying mysteriously from $500 to $500,000. Members think the Rayburn bill might drop those pleasant prices, perhaps, to $5000, and they don't like that.

Besides, many, probably 95 per cent, sincerely believe that they are public benefactors, preserving for the country "liquid values" absolutely essential to the convenient conduct of business.

Spectator

As the Millen-Faber jury left Dedham yesterday to view the scenes, Mrs. Margaret Smith Brighton, mother of Norma Brighton Millen, stood outside Dedham jail and, watched the jurors file by.

EVIL OF COUNTY RULE CITED

evils are attendant on this form of government.

"We are endeavoring to reorganize a system that is as old as America, but we believe we shall succeed in doing away with wasteful overlapping.

"In New York and Pennsylvania sentiment is almost completely in favor of breaking up the county government into smaller and less wasteful units, but New England does not have this sentiment as yet."

ENDORSE CELLER BILL

The round table discussion at which Mrs. Prince spoke was one of six which occupied the attention of the delegates during the morning.

Meanwhile, the Board of Directors of the league, in executive session, adopted a resolution calling on the league affiliates throughout the country to support the Celler bill, now before Congress, which would repeal that section of the Economy Act which closes the doors of government positions to married women.

"If a woman is disqualified to hold a job her marital state should have no bearing on her employment," declared Miss Marguerite Wells of Montana, chairman of the legislative committee of the league.

The Celler bill was introduced in Congress at the behest of the league.

ANCIENT GAVEL USED

The gavel which Miss Belle Sherman, national president of the League, is using during the convention sessions is the original gavel used for many years by Susan B. Anthony in her fight for suffrage, Miss Sherman revealed today.

The gavel, in 1920 was turned over to the League by Miss Lucy Anthony, niece of the great suffrage leader. It bears a plate with the inscription "Order Is the First Law of Heaven."

BIG MILLION IN TAX SEEN IN RACE TRACK BILL

New revenue amounting to $500,000 the first year and exceeding $1,000,000 the second and third years would come to the state with the legalization of horse and dog pari-mutuel betting, Rep. Christian A. Herter of Boston estimated today at a hearing before the House Ways and Means Committee.

Herter and former Rep. Bayard Tuckerman, Jr., socialite and sportsman of Hamilton, were among a score of speakers sponsoring the horse racing bill before the committee.

While the advocates of horse and dog racing were seeking the advancement of their measure before the House committee, another group, headed by Rep. Lewis R. Sullivan of Dorchester, were urging the Senate Committee on Ways and Means to report favorably on a bill passed by the House giving the people in the fall election the opportunity of saying whether they wanted the state to set up official monthly lotteries.

Cities and towns would benefit financially from both bills.

Herter told the House committee that Rockingham Park in New Hampshire, with a single track, brought that state a little under $500,000, while the Canadian tracks showed revenue of well over $1,000,000.

He said that 24 states have legalized the pari-mutuel system of betting and that New York has licensed book-making pending a constitutional change to allow pari-mutuels.

WOMAN GIVES UP IN DEATH CASE

Sought by police for several days, a Cambridge woman today surrendered in East Cambridge court on a warrant charging her with performing an illegal operation on a Dedham girl who was found dead in Newton last Wednesday under mysterious circumstances.

The woman, Mrs. Louise Tagliafico, 40, of Clifton st., North Cambridge, pleaded not guilty and was held under $2000 for a hearing May 12.

Victim of the operation, according to police, was pretty Miss Martha Rayner, 20, of Whiting ave., Dedham. She was found dead in a room that she rented only three days previous by her landlady, Mrs. Bertha Hill at Webster st., West Newton.

Roosevelt Leading Film Fan; Sees 1327 Reels

By Associated Press

New York, April 24—Variety, weekly theatrical paper, today said President Roosevelt has viewed 1327 reels of motion picture film since he took office in March, 1933. The score, Variety said, is 202 more reels than is viewed in the same length of time by the average stenographer or clerk, who is rated a "rabid fan."

Continuing the score comparison, the weekly said Roosevelt viewed four times as much film footage as did Hoover and five times as much as Coolidge.

In March, 1933, during the banking crisis, Variety related, he viewed six feature pictures in the White House. In May and June, during the creation of NRA, he saw 21; in July and August, 17; in September, October and November, 17, and in December and January, 11. He also saw 73 short subjects and 500 newsreels.

The features ranged from Mae West to George Arliss. He ordered a repeat of "Gabriel Over the White House."

"To film leaders," Variety said, "the President's picture-mindedness is more than for simple divertisement. He is said to see the screen in mirroring current public sentiment and to believe that this provides him with an opportunity of getting closer to the people."

Train Halted to Foil Death Try

The conductor of a Boston and Maine passenger train was being congratulated for his action in which he apparently removed the thought of suicide from the head of a well dressed man.

The man, about 50 years of age, stood in the path of the train at Winn st. bridge, Wakefield. The conductor approached and asked the man to step aside to be informed that the man intended to commit suicide. The conductor's pleas finally induced the man to abandon his idea.

ECCO STORES DRIVE WINS

Gratifying public response to the "customers' week" appeal of Economy Grocery Stores Corp. was announced today by the company officials.

The experiment will be continued throughout the week.

It is announced by the management as a week in which thousands of new patrons, as well as old, will be offered the greatest list of food specials ever presented to the public by this corporation.

"Dozens of well known quality foods are on sale at prices amazingly low.

"There are prices that will means savings for every food budget.

"In order to reach the greatest numbers, and give them the benefit, Economy Stores Corp. is this week releasing eight and one-half full pages of advertising to attract customers."

Bryan's Son Named in Silver Holder List

Washington, April 24—A list of silver holders furnished the Senate today by the treasury disclosed the name of William J. Bryan, Jr., of Los Angeles.

The report said Bryan, whose father ran for President three times and who was a leading advocate of monetization of silver at a 16 to 1 ratio with gold, held a long position in silver on March 4. It gave no amount.

The list gave names beginning with letters running from A. to H. Others will be submitted later.

Another familiar name on the list is that of Stuyvesant Fish, of New York, for three long future positions on July 5, July 12, and May 6, with Hubbard Brothers and Callaway Fish and Co. The year was not given.

The Chase National Bank, with 18,096,109 ounces, headed a list of corporations named as silver holders.

Those listed are: The Bank of Manhattan, 11,063,759; Eastman Sachs and Co., 2,824,355. Guaranty Kodak Co., 12,009,514. Goldman Trust Co., 4,000,000; Handy and Harmon, New York, 3,641,006; Dillon Read & Co., 1,460,310; Fall River HeraldNew Co, $50,401.

The list was requested by the Senate in an effort to learn whether there was undue speculation in the metal to affect the price.

Among corporation holders listed is Continental Can Co., of New York, for 200,096 ounces and Carl Conway, chairman of the board of that corporation, was one who gave a dinner in Washington last night to members of the House and Senate interested in silver legislation.

SCHALL SPURNS FIRST LADY BID

By Associated Press

Washington, April 24—A meeting between Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Senator Schall (R.), Minnesota, to discuss the prices charged for furniture manufactured at her Hyde Park, N. Y., factory appears improbable.

Mrs. Roosevelt said today she didn't know whether she would see him or write him a letter.

The Senator was quoted by his secretary as saying he would not go to the White House today and indicated he saw no use of going ever.

Mrs. Roosevelt issued a telephone invitation yesterday morning for the Senator to go to the White House, she denied his charge she was capitalizing her White House position to make money on her Hyde Park factory. She said she made no profit.

Schall did not appear, but later said he had suggested noon today for the meeting.

ARRAIGN BOYS IN 'LOOP' DASH

While a Chelsea boy remained in City Hospital with a bullet wound in his wrist, his three alleged pals were arraigned in Charlestown court today, the aftermath of what police say was their attempt to speed a stolen car over Charlestown's Bunker Hill "loop."

The victim is Eugene Sullivan, 16, of Williams st., Chelsea. He was shot when the revolver of Patrolman John Rice, of the City Square station, accidentally discharged when he climbed aboard the car in which the four rode.

The other three, Clarence Taylor, 17, of Blossom st., Paul Sekenski, 16, of Beacon st., and Albert Ronconie, 18, of Michael pl., all Chelsea, were held under $1000 bonds each for a hearing Saturday.

BOSTON FEUDS SPUR VOTE IN PRE-PRIMARY

Just the candidates and their friends made up the bulk of pre-primary voters who went to the polls today to choose delegates to the state conventions and state and city and town committees and ward committees.

Interest in the vote was especially low throughout the state, but it was predicted that Boston would pull out 20 per cent. of its registered vote, because of a half a dozen wrangles that lent color to the contests here.

Chief of these was the Coakley-McGlue row in which Daniel H. Coakley, Jr., charged that Charles F. McGlue was responsible for circulating bogus ballots.

Answering the charge today, McGlue said Coakley was a "publicity seeker."

McGlue explained that the ballots sent out were merely copies of official ballots, reduced in size, printed on different colored paper, and with ward and precinct numbers removed.

"Every precaution was taken to prevent any confusion in the minds of the voters. The ballot was sponsored by a voter of Boston whose name and address appeared on every ballot in compliance with the law," McGlue declared.

MAYNARD IN PEACE MOVE

The Coakley-McGlue row has caused Democratic state headquarters to the extent that Chairman Joseph A. Maynard had to step in.

"We have been besieged with protests against the ballots that have been distributed in parts of Massachusetts and particularly in many of the Boston wards, that are headed 'Official ballots of the Democratic party,'" Chairman Maynard said.

"On those ballots are marked 'X' against certain names.

"Lest there be any misunderstanding on anyone's part I wish to announce that neither the chairman nor the state committee as a whole has indorsed any candidates for delegates, members of the state committee or ward or town committees."

Young Coakley is heading a slate of six delegate candidates in Ward 12, Brighton, "pledged to Gov. Ely."

McGlue is a state committee candidate himself from Ward 8, and is said to be interested in the delegate battle he has organized to return to his old post as state chairman.

Only a handful of so-called party leaders are among the contestants today.

For this reason, Gen. Charles H. Cole, former Democratic gubernatorial nominee, one of 14 contestants for three delegate seats in McGlue's bailiwick, Ward 8, and Joseph Bartlett, Democratic delegate candidate, mentioned as a possible successor to Governor Ely, are conspicuous.

Ward 5 also contains four prominent Republican candidates for the A. O. P. convention elected to four allotted seats without a contest. They are Sen. Henry Parkman, Rep. Christian A. Herter, close friend of former President Hoover, City Councilor Henry L. Shattuck, and Mrs. Dora E. Wheeler.

OHIO IN CONTEST

Because of intense rivalry among 12 Democratic candidates for eight delegate seats in Ward 1, East Boston, battles for ward machinery control in Ward 3 in the West End, and sharp contests for places on the Republican State Committee from the second and eighth Suffolk districts, and for the Republican Ward 20 committee in West Roxbury, polles on election duty were keeping a sharp lookout for disturbances.

Capt. Joseph F. Gargan is an outstanding candidate in the Ward 19 group for delegate to the Democratic convention. He was the first United States Marine Corps officer to be wounded in the last war.

Among the 42 Democratic candidates for the same convention in Ward 1, East Boston, former Rep. Thomas A. Niland, stormy petrel of Boston politics for many years, is conspicuous.

The contest for Republican state committeeman in the Second Suffolk district is between Meyer Weker, Edward L. Donnelly and Saverio R. Romano, all of Boston. Romano is being backed by the Charles H. Innes forces.

JUNIOR BIRDMEN OF AMERICA

Prizes Offered to Local Junior Birdmen Motto Contest Winners! Coast Trip for National Winner May Be Won Here

By LAWRENCE SHAW
National Director

Say, Junior Birdmen, wouldn't you like to win a prize just for thinking up a single motto or slogan? Sure you would.

I am going to make it possible for you to do so and the prizes will be announced as soon as possible. You'll be proud to receive one of these, so begin writing out your motto for the Junior Birdmen now.

These prizes will be awarded to two Group "A" members and two Group "B" members.

I told you that this would be a very easy contest, one in which every boy and every girl could take part in and have an equal opportunity to win one of the fine awards. Well, here is all there is to it:

Every organization has a motto, whether it be "Do a Good Turn Daily," "Preparedness Is Our Creed" or "Across First." We, too, should have a motto and it is up to you members to find one for us. Every Junior Birdmen wing city is conducting this activity to seek an official motto and every wing city is going to have four awards of its own, similar to the three-day trips to Washington which the New York American wing is offering members in the New York area.

After the four best mottos are selected in each town by the wing commander and his committee, they will be forwarded to national headquarters, where a national committee, to be announced in this column shortly, will choose the prize winning motto.

As an additional award, the national winner, whose motto will become the official motto of the Junior Birdmen, will receive a transcontinental trip on a fast United Air Line Boeing passenger transport plane. Just think of it—an opportunity to make a coast to coast trip by airplane! A seven-day tour with a stop off at the Chicago World Fair.

If a member in one of our Eastern cities is the victor, he will be flown to San Francisco or Los Angeles where he will be feted. If a Western boy or girl is the winner, he or she will be brought to New York where due arrangements for this interesting stay will be arranged. Should a member from one of our Wing cities elsewhere in the country, such as Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee or Omaha, submit the best motto, he may choose either New York or the West Coast as his or her destination and an extra airline trip will be arranged to cover that part of the cross country trip he or she long.

Send in Your Mottos Now

So, you Boston Wing members, here is a chance for you not only to win local prizes, but a cross country flight to the West Coast as well.

Here is all you have to do:

Get out a piece of paper and jot down all the worthwhile mottos you can think of for the junior organization. They must be original. The rules are easy so be sure to follow them closely.

Here they are:

1—No boy or girl may compete in the Junior Birdmen motto contest unless he or she is a member of the Junior Birdman organization. Boys and girls who sent in applications for membership but have not as yet received their membership may submit mottos. By the time the winners are chosen, their memberships will have been sent out and their name included on our records.

2—All mottos must be sent to the Junior Birdman wing through which you enrolled. Be sure you put the words "Motto Contest" in the lower left corner when you address your envelope.

3—Members may send in as many mottos as they choose. Be sure to put your name and address on each list you send in.

4—In case of a tie, all tieing contestants will receive the full award.

5—Slogans may contain any number of words but preferably few.

6—All slogans must be in the mail by Monday midnight, April 30th.

7—Announcement of the names of the local winners will be made in the Junior Birdmen column of Sunday, May 6th. Announcement of national winner will be made at a later date.

That's all there is to it, members, and believe me, it's going to be worth every while to win a prize slogan. Be one of the first to get your list in. Certainly you can think of some very interesting ones.

Cross-Country Trip To Be Described

In tomorrow's column I will publish complete details of the national award—a seven-day transcontinental trip from coast to coast, and what a trip it will be. Some boy or girl is going to be lucky! It can be you!

Don't forget tomorrow we will also have the second list in our dictionary series. Don't miss it.

Happy landings!

RAYBURN LOBBY CHARGE DENIED

Washington, April 24 (AP)—Fresh charges of organized lobbying against the stock market control bill—quickly and sharply denied—were seen today by leaders as fuel for debate in approaching congressional battles over regulation of the marts.

Both the New York Stock Exchange and the durable goods industries committees hit back at lobbying charges by Chairman Rayburn of House commerce committee. He had attributed to the "most powerful lobby ever organized against any bill" what he called a "campaign of fright and misrepresentation."

Richard Whitney, president of the New York Exchange, promptly asserted his organization's opposition had been "open and above board."

George H. Houston, vice-president of the National Association of Manufacturers, shot back:

"As no time has this committee been approached by representatives of the securities exchanges in an effort to influence its judgment in this matter."

3 BANK CHIEFS FACE TRIAL

Possibility that three more officials of the closed Boston Continental National Bank would face prosecution loomed today as U. S. Atty. Francis J. W. Ford continued his probe of the affairs of the crippled institution.

The Federal grand jury convenes today but it is not believed that evidence in the Continental Bank case will be presented now, owing to the involved manner in which the irregularities were uncovered.

However, it is understood that sufficient evidence has been uncovered to involve at least three of the bank's officials on charges of violating the national banking laws.

Sub Masters' Club to Hold Dinner

The annual dinner of the Boston Sub-Masters' Club will be held at the Boston City Club tomorrow night. The invited guests are the members of the school committee, Superintendent Patrick T. Campbell, and the members of the board of superintendents.

Additional guests will be four former sub-masters who have been elevated to masterships during the past year: Frederic J. Dunfey of the Dwight district, William J. Lenihan of the Mary Hemenway district, James E. Dolan of the Beethoven district, and Thomas L. Mea of the John A. Andrew district.

THE THIN MAN -:- By Dashiell Hammett

Nick Charles Plans to Meet Wynant, Sought in Slaying

Soon to appear on the screen as a thrilling motion picture made by Cosmopolitan Productions for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Dorothy, wearing a nightgown and a robe of Nora's, both much too long for her, came in yawning. "Oh!" she exclaimed when she saw Macauley, and then, when she had recognized him, "Oh, hello, Mr. Macauley. I didn't know you were here. Is there any news of my father?"

He looked at me. I shook my head. He told her: "Not yet, but perhaps we'll have some today."

I said: "Dorothy's had some, indirectly. Tell Macaulay about Gilbert."

"You mean about—about my father—" she asked hesitantly, staring at the floor.

"Oh, dear me, no," I said.

Her face flushed and she glanced reproachfully at me; then, hastily, she told Macaulay: "Gil saw my father yesterday and he told Gil who killed Miss Wolf."

"What?"

She nodded four or five times, earnestly.

Macaulay looked at me with puzzled eyes.

"This doesn't have to've happened," I reminded him. "It's what Gil says happened."

"I see. Then you think he might be—?"

"You haven't done much talking in the family since bell broke lose, have you?" I asked.

"No."

"It's an experience. They're all crazy, I think. They start off—"

Dorothy said angrily: "I think you're horrid. I've done my best to—"

"What are you kicking about?" I demanded. "I'm giving you a break this time: I'm willing to believe Gil did tell you that. Don't expect too much of me."

Macaulay asked: "And who killed her?"

"I don't know. Gil wouldn't tell me."

"Had your brother seen him often?"

"I don't know how often. He said he had been seeing him."

"And was anything said — well — about the man Nunheim?"

"No. Nick asked me that. He didn't tell me anything else at all."

I caught Nora's eye and made signals. She stood up saying: "Let's go in the other room, Dorothy, and give these lads a chance to do whatever it is they think they're doing."

Dorothy went reluctantly, but she went out with Nora.

Macaulay said: "She's grown up to be something to look at." He cleared his throat. "I hope your wife won't—"

"Forget it. Noras all right. You started to tell me about your conversation with Wynant."

"He phoned right after the police left and said he'd seen the ad in the Times and wanted to know what I wanted. I told him you weren't anxious to get yourself mixed up in his troubles and had said you wouldn't touch it at all without talking it over with him first, and we made the date for tonight. Then he asked if I'd seen Mimi and I told him I'd seen her once or twice since her return from Europe and had also seen his daughter. And then he said this: 'If my wife should ask for money, give her any sum in reason.'"

"I'll be damned, I said.

Macaulay nodded. "That's the way I felt about it. I asked him why and he said what he'd read in the morning papers had convinced him that she was Nunheim's dupe, not his confederate, and he had reason to believe she was kindly disposed' towards him, Wynant. I began to see what he was up to, then, and I told him she had already turned the knife and chuin over to the police. And try to guess what he said to that."

"I give up."

"He hemmed and hawed a bit —not much, mind you— and then as smooth as you like asked: 'You mean the chain and knife on the watch I left with Julia to be repaired?'"

I laughed. "What'd you say?"

"That stumped me. Before I could think up an answer he was saying: 'However, we can discuss that more fully when we meet tonight.' I asked him where and when we'd meet him and he said he'd have to phone me, he didn't know where he'd be. He's to phone me at my house at 10 o'clock. He was in a hurry now, though he had seemed leisurely enough before, and hadn't time to answer any of the things I wanted to ask, so he hung up and I phoned you. What do you think of his innocence now?"

"Not as much as I did." I replied slowly. "How sure are you of hearing from him at 10 tonight?"

Macaulay shrugged. "You know as much about that as I do."

"Then if I were you I wouldn't bother the police till we've grabbed our wild man and can turn him over to them. This story of yours isnt going to make them exactly love you and, even if they don't throw you in the can right away they'll make things pretty disagreeable for you if Wynant gives us a run-around tonight."

"I know, but I'd like to get the load off my shoulders."

"A few hours more oughtn't to matter much," I said. "Did either of you say anything about his not keeping the date at the Plaza."

"No. I didn't get a chance to ask him. Well, if you say wait, I'll wait, but—"

"Let's wait till tonight, anyhow, till he phones you—if he does—and then we can make up our minds whether to take the police along."

"You don't think he'll phone?"

"I'm not too sure," I said. "He didn't keep in last date with you, and he seems to have gone pretty vague on you as soon as he learned that Mimi had turned in the watch-chain and knife. I wouldn't be too optimistic about it. We'll see, though. I'd better get out to your house at about nine o'clock, hadn't I?"

"Come for dinner."

"I can't, but I'll make it as early as I can, in case he's ahead of time. We'll want to move fast. Where do you live?"

Macaulay gave me his address, in Scarsdale, and stood up. "Will you say goodby to Mrs. Charles for me and thank—Oh, by the way, I hope you didn't misunderstand me about Harrison Quinn last night. I meant only just what I said, that I'd had bad luck taking his advice on the market. I didn't mean to insinuate that there was anything—you know—or that he might not've made money for his other customers."

"I understand," I said, and called Nora.

She and Macaulay shook hands and made polite speeches to each other and he pushed Asta around a little and said, "Make it as early as you can," to me and went away.

"There goes the hockey game," I said, "unless you find somebody else to go with."

"Did I miss anything?" Nora asked.

"Not much." I told her what Macaulay had told me. "And don't ask me what I think of it. I don't know. I know Wynant's crazy, but he's not acting like a crazy man and he's not acting like a murderer. He's acting like a man playing some kind of game. God only knows what the game is."

"I think," she said, "that he's shielding somebody else."

"Why don't you think he did it?"

She looked surprised. "Because you don't."

I said that was a swell reason. "Who is the somebody else?"

"I don't know yet. Now don't make fun of me: I've thought about it a lot. It wouldn't be Macaulay, because he's using him to help shield whoever it is and—"

"And it wouldn't be me," I suggested, "because he wants to use me."

"That's right," she said, "and you're going to feel very silly if you make fun of me and then I guess who it is before you do. And it wouldn't be either Mimi or Jorgensen, because he tried to throw suspicion on them. And it wouldn't be Nunheim, because he was most likely killed by the same person and, furthermore, wouldn't have to be shielded now. And it wouldn't be Morelli, because Wynant was jealous of him and they'd had a row." She frowned at me. "I wish you'd found out more about that big fat man they called Sparrow and that big red-haired woman."

"But how about Dorothy and Gilbert?"

"I wanted to ask you about them. Do you think he's got any strong paternal feeling for them?"

"No."

"You're probably just trying to discourage me," she said. "Well, knowing them, it's hard to think either of them might've been guilty, but I tried to throw out my personal feelings and stick to logic. Before I went to sleep last night I made a list of all the—"

"There's nothing like a little logic-sticking to ward off insomnia. It's like—"

"Don't be so damned patronizing. Your performance so far has been a little less than dazzling."

"I didn't mean no harm," I said and kissed her. "That a new dress?"

"Ah! Changing the subject, you coward."

I went to see Guild early in the afternoon and went to work on him as soon as we had shaken hands. "I didn't bring my lawyer along. I thought it looked better if I came by myself."

Fascists Expect to Win Britain at Polls in '36

Editor's Note: Sir Oswald Mosley, now 37, hopes to become the Fascist head of the British government before he is 40, writes H. R. Knickerbocker in the second article of his series on the British blackshirts.

"Give us two years more of preparation and if we continue to grow as we have in the past 18 months we will win in 1936," the British Fascist leader tells Knickerbocker.

London, April 24—Mussolini receives in the most magnificent room of the most magnificent palace in Rome, the Palazzo Venezia. Hitler receives in the bright, modern, luxurious rooms of the Reichs Chancellery in Berlin.

Sir Oswald Mosley, candidate to be the Mussolini or the Hitler of Britain, receives in the most primitive room of the cold, monastic building they call the Black House in London.

Twenty years ago, Mosley flew over the German front. Later he crashed and today his right leg is two inches shorter than his left leg. But he came forward to greet his visitor without a limp. Despite his injury he became runner-up in the British fencing championship, second best fencer in Britain.

AIRMEN PLAY ROLE

Airmen play a great role in European fascism. Balbo in Italy, Goering in Germany, and now Mosley in Britain have taken the lead.

He sat at a rickety desk. Looking down upon us was a big portrait of Mussolini, close friend of Sir Oswald.

"The classic man," observed Sir Oswald, indicating the Mussolini portrait. "That pulse that Mussolini has. It is the pulse of the men of classic times."

Of the fascist leaders of Europe, Mosley is the only one of noble birth. He is the sixth baronet, or hereditary knight. His baronetcy was created in 1781. One of his ancestors was the living originator and model of the John Bull who represents England as Uncle Sam represents America.

He was educated at the fashionable public school, Winchester, and, intending to become a professional soldier, became a cadet at Sandhurst, the British West Point. As an officer of the Sixteenth Lancers he entered the war, switched to the Royal Air force, was invalided out in 1916 after the injury to his leg failed to heal, and in 1918, at 22, entered politics as member of parliament for the Tory party.

The youngest aristocrat, steadily winning recognition by his gifts of oratory, gradually went left. He became independent in 1922. His rise was meteoric. By 1929, at 33 he was a member of the cabinet in the Labor government. A brilliant marriage with Lady Cynthia, daughter of the late Marquis Curzon of Kedleston and his wife, the daughter of Levi Leiter, millionaire Chicagoan, added to the talk that Mosley was a coming prime minister.

BREAKS WITH LABOR

In the midst of his first cabinet job, Mosley broke with labor, resigning because it would not accept his plans for dealing with the unemployed. Breaking on his personal prestige he founded the so-called new party, which collapsed. It failed to get a single seat in the elections of 1931. Its enemies has called it Fascist.

"But when do you expect to win, Sir Oswald?" I asked.

It must be remembered that the Mosley plan is to capture control of England by strictly legal means.

He said:

"If the next election comes in two years at the expiration of the present Parliament, we should be able to fight that election throughout England. We do not intend to make a campaign until we have hopes of winning a majority. Hitler could campaign for only a few seats, which were well worth while at the beginning of his movement, because Germany had a proportional system of representation.

"By the British system we could poll millions of votes and not win one seat in Parliament. We cannot afford to do that. It is too costly.

"But give us two years of prosperity and if we continue to grow as we have . . . in our first 18 months, and the finances of the party are guaranteed as I hope they will be—we should be able to go out to win in 1936."

"To fight an election over all England we would require 400 to 500 candidates. I think we should have type of party—speaker than any other—capable mob orators, effective with crowds. We shall not campaign when it suits our opponents, but when it suits us. It will suit us when we can win."

Hitler was 44 when he became master of Germany. Mussolini was 31 when he marched on Rome. Mosley is today 37 years old. He hopes to become the Fascist chief of the British government before he is 40. In the next article he explains why.

ROCKIN' CHAIR LADY IS GUEST ON "X-9" PROGRAM

Mildred Bailey on Air Here Tonight

By N. F. T.

Here it is the regular weekly evening when more lively "Secret Agent X-9" doings take place for the "X-9" followers (WAAB) at 6:30 p. m. An unusual "mike" show has been made ready for staging again this time, with the "Chief" bringing the popular Mildred Bailey to the studio from the Keith-Boston Theater stage where she's "Rockin' Chair" lady is appearing behind footlights all week as the headline personality. Mildred Bailey has long been an outstanding coast to coast network star and is at present touring the nation in person. Her familiar "Rockin' Chair" theme song is well known and an instant identification for her voice among loudspeaker patrons everywhere.

POPULAR PROGRAM

In addition, the "X-9" audience of New England will hear little nine-year-old Linus Macdonald, sensational boy cornetist of Jamaica Plain. A solo or so is also to be turned in by John Murphy, widely acclaimed Somerville high school singer. Each week henceforth, talented members of the rapidly-growing Boston Evening American "X-9" Club are to be brought before the microphone to air their specialties. Incidentally, there are now more than 74,000 boys and girls enrolled and wearing the shiny "X-9" badge.

Some authentic angles as to how and where the NRA stands at present, along with a discussion of what the next trend of recovery development will be, furnishes the broadcasting train of thought for James Roosevelt, eldest son of the President, when he holds forth tonight, filling time from until 8 o'clock (WAAB) along Yankee Network waves.

Ben Bernie and his music makers are still maintaining residence in Hollywood. Ben is considered a real part of the gay life out among the movie folk. Tonight, bressing his broadcast over Eastward, the "Old Maestro" plans to introduce lovely Joan Marsh as his guest artist (WEEI) between 9 and 9:30 p. m.

CONSISTENT COMEDY

Stoopnagle and Bud, funsters with a wide following, go in for some musical anaylsis on a burlesque basis this evening (WNAC) at 10 o'clock. Advance word states the lads will endeavor to compose some words for the tuneful "Do, Re, Mi, Fa, So, La, Ti, Do," scale. They likewise propose to trace the origin of "Bong" as an accepted church bell note. These two chaps manage to continue their ridiculous performing. They produce genuine-ly humorous diversion week in and week out, which would seem to be the test of a real comedian—or even two real comedians.

Some shivery hair raising radio drama is due this evening when "Crime Clues" staging takes place (WBZ) at 8 o'clock. It's the new Stewart Sterling mystery story "Boomerang Blade" or at least the first installment of it. Broadcasting bosses are leaning slightly toward the serial arrangement right now. Indications are that more such presentations will come if they find the listeners actually hanging on from one instalment to another with any pronounced evidence of sustained enthusiasm.

Koussevitzky Delights in Tchaikovsky Festival

By MOSES SMITH

Serge Koussevitzky makes a characteristic gesture by ending the 10th season of his leadership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with a Tchaikovsky Festival. Koussevitzky has given many remarkable performances in these 10 years, and, while ranging widely over the symphonic repertoire, he has proved himself a master of many schools.

But I suspect that Tchaikovsky is his first love, to whom he returns with never-ending freshness and enthusiasm.

This impression was certainly warranted by the great playing of the orchestra and Koussevitzky's magnificient leadership during last night's opening of the festival, when the large Symphony Hall audience heard the String Serenade, Opus 48, and the fourth symphony in F minor. Boston concert-goers who have heard this fourth symphony under Koussevitzky's baton are prepared for a tense, tautly emotional version of alternate despair and jubilation in tone, a version brilliantly executed by an orchestra that plays as a single many-stopped instrument under the conductor's hands. Yet in this performance Koussevitzky surpassed himself, and made the orchestra outdo itself.

The Serenade is ingratiating music, which has been undeservedly neglected at these concerts for 16 years. It is true that this music is old-fashioned, pre-war stuff; that a harmonic sequence here and there, or even a contrapuntal page is a bit too naive for listeners as sophisticated as the 1934 brand. The same criticism, however, holds for most of Tchaikovsky's greater works. Yet they have survived, maintaining their popularity and retaining their hold.

The effect of this music was unquestionably enhanced by the sheer virtuosity of performance, and by the suavity and clarity of the lines which Koussevitzky drew. Aside from a slightly hysterical tendency in the first movement, which resulted in some tonal roughness, the playing of the Serenade was a marvel of precision and dexterity, of tonal beauty and lovely phrasing, of light and shadow, and of explosive emotion.

LOWELL TO VIEW PORTRAIT

A private showing of Whistler's famous portrait of his mother will be given today to a delegation from the Fogg Art Association preparatory to its public exhibition, starting tomorrow and continuing until May 13 at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

Special precautions are being taken with the painting, which is valued at $1,000,000. A guard of Boston police will be maintained over the painting during its exhibition and two huge police dogs will mount guard over the vault in which it is placed each night.

The portrait is to be exhibited with more than 100 more of Whistler's works, which have been borrowed from private collections.

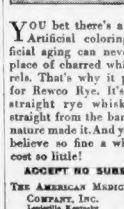
NOT ARTIFICIALLY AGED BUT STRAIGHT FROM THE BARREL



YOU bet there's a difference! Artificial coloring and artificial aging can never take the place of charred white oak barrels. That's why it pays to ask for Rewco Rye. It's a genuine straight rye whisky, bottled straight from the barrel—just as nature made it. And you wouldn't believe so fine a whisky could cost so little!

DICKENS WAXES SARCASTIC IN LETTER TO MISS LEIGH

WHEN LITERARY HONORS FIRST SOUGHT HIM

This likeness of Charles Dickens was drawn in pencil by R. J. Lane, A. E., when Dickens was about 30. Literary honors were just beginning to come to him and his writings were coming into favor. It was years later that fame came to him.

CATHERINE GEORGINA CHARLES DICKENS

DICKENS' BEST PORTRAIT

This pencil drawing by MacLise was pronounced the best of all portraits of Charles Dickens by his daughter, Mamie. In the picture with the author are his wife, Catherine Hogarth Dickens, and her sister, Georgina Hogarth.

THE AUTHOR'S IDEAL WHEN SHE WAS 20

"The Love Letters of Charles Dickens" were addressed to this comely young lady, Maria Beadnell, who is shown when she was about 20. In his early youth, Dickens wrote passionate epistles of love to her and although their romance was wrecked, she never ceased to be his ideal, as his letters to her revealed his love and affection.

Bring Out Your Best Love Letters and Win a Prize

Today the Boston Evening American announces a contest which should revive old memories, bring about a resurrection of ribbon-bound files, reunite, perhaps, people who had thought their ways divided forever—and which, in any event will bring prizes to the winners.

This is the Charles Dickens love letter contest, inspired by "The Love Letters of Charles Dickens," which are now appearing in this newspaper.

In the contest, a prize of $10, two prizes of $5 each, two of $2.50 each and 25 guest tickets to the Loew's Orpheum picture, "Men in White," are offered—merely for the love letters which you received and which you think the best of all.

ALL ARE ELIGIBLE

There is no age limit in this contest, men and women alike are eligible and there are no complicated rules.

All you need to do is look in your treasure chest, your cache of memories, bring out the one love letter you have always treasured as best. The letter, in fact, which moved you most.

Merely send this letter—or a true copy of the letter—to the Dickens Love Letter Editor of the Boston Evening American at 8 Winthrop sq., Boston.

You may enclose only your name and address, or you may include your own name to be used with the letter. Use of the name is optional with you, but if you wish the name used, please indicate plainly in a statement signed by you.

EXPLAIN ON NAMES

Naturally, the name of the second party to the letter will not be used, and if you do not wish your own name used, please say so, frankly.

Love is the basis of all existence, and love, in human existence, has always been expressed in the written word. There are few who, some time in their lives, have not been in love.

Likewise, any lover worth his or her salt has expressed that love in a letter to the other party. Thus the contest.

In the Boston Evening American, the love letters of Charles Dickens breathe a romance whose discovery has opened a new insight into the famed author's life.

For Maria Beadnell, a banker's daughter, the author had a first love which came eventually to bitter disappointment, but his letters in the period before his disillusionment are masterpieces.

Perhaps up in that attic trunk you have similar letters. If so, merely dig them out and submit them in the contest. This contest will close on midnight next Monday, April 30—so get them in early.

Address your letters to the Charles Dickens Love Letter Editor, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop sq., Boston.

Dickens' Letters Reveal His Heart Woes

implicate me as a dishonorable babbler, with little heart and less head, that in justice to myself I cannot refrain from adverting to it.

You will at once perceive I allude to your giving them to understand (if not directly, by implication) that I had made you my confidante, with respect to anything which (may) have passed between Maria B. and myself. Now passing over any remark which may have been artfully elicited from me in any unguarded moment, I can safely say that I never made a confidante of any one.

I am perfectly willing to admit that if I had wished to secure a confidante in whom candour, secrecy and kind honorable feeling were indispensable requisites I could have looked to no one better calculated for this office than yourself; but still the making you the depositary of my feelings or secrets, is an honor I never presumed to expect, and one which I certainly must beg most positively to decline—A proof of self-denial in which so far as I learn from other avowed confidantes of your, I am by no means singular.

I have not hesitated to speak plainly because I feel most strongly on this subject. The allegation—if it were not grossly untrue—I again say tending so materially to inculpate me, and the assertion itself having been made (so far as I can learn at least, for it has reached me in a very circuitous manner) certainly not in the most unaffected or delicate way.

I hope you will understand that in troubling you, I am not actuated by any absurd idea of self consequence. I am perfectly aware of my own unimportance, and it is solely because I am so; because I would much rather mismanage my own affairs, than have them ably conducted by the officious interference of any one, because I do think that your interposition in this instance, however well intentioned, has been productive of as much mischief as it has been uncalled for.

And because I am really and sincerely desirous of sparing you the meanness and humiliation of acting in the petty character of an unauthorized go-between that I have been induced to write this note—for the length of which I beg you will accept my apology.

I am, dear Miss Leigh,

Your &c.,
CHARLES DICKENS.

After reading all this Maria Beadnell replied immediately so that her letter reached him Saturday. Before returning the one he proposed to send to Marianne, she copied it carefully and thus it was fortunately preserved for posterity. She wrote that Marianne would probably blame her for the whole trouble; then after asking to see Marianne's answer she deigned to give him permission to write to her again, if he chose. There is no record that Miss Leigh ever answered his letter.

The following "conciliatory note" is the last one in existence that he wrote at this period; it tells of his love as only he could relate it. It shows also how deeply Maria had wounded him, and that he had little hope of a favorable reply. The note read:

18 Bentinck Street
Sunday morning

Dear Miss Beadnell:

I am anxious to take the earliest opportunity of writing to you again, knowing that the opportunity of addressing you through Kolle—now my only means of communicating with you—will shortly be lost (Kolle was to marry Anne Beadnell) and having your own permission to write to you, I am most desirous of forwarding a note which had I received such permission earlier, I can assure you you would have received ere this.

Before proceeding to say a word upon the subject of my present note let me beg you to believe that your request to see Marianne Leigh's answer is rendered quite unnecessary by my previous determination to shew it to you, which I shall do immediately on receiving it—that is to say, if I receive any at all.

If I know anything of her art or disposition, however, you are mistaken in supposing that her remarks will be directed against yourself. I shall be the mark at which all the anger and spleen will be directed—and I shall take it very quietly, for whatever she may say I shall positively decline to enter into any further controversy with her.

I shall have no objection to break a lance, paper or otherwise, with any champion to whom she may please to entrust her cause but I will have no further correspondence or communication with her personally or in writing. I have copied the note and done up the parcel which will go off by the first Clapton Coach tomorrow morning.

And now to the object of my present note. I have considered and reconsidered the matter, and I have come to the unqualified determination that I will allow no feeling of pride, no haughty dislike to making a conciliation to prevent by expressing it without reserve.

I will advert to nothing that has passed; will not again seek to excuse any part I have acted or to justify it by any course you have ever pursued; I will revert to nothing that has ever passed between us—I will only openly and at once say that there is nothing I have more at heart, nothing that I more sincerely and earnestly desire, than to be reconciled to you.

It would be useless for me to repeat here what I have so often said before; it would be equally useless to look forward and state my hopes for the future—all that any one can do to raise himself by his own exertions and unceasing assiduity I have done, and will do.

I have no guide by which to ascertain your present feelings and I have, God knows, no means of influencing them in my favor.

I never have loved and I never can love any human creature breathing but yourself. We have had many differences, and we have lately been entirely separated. Absence, however, has not altered my feelings in the slightest degree, and the love I now tender you is as pure and as lasting as at any period of our former correspondence. I have now done all I can to remove our most unfortunate and to me most unhappy misunderstanding. The matter now of course rests solely with you, and you will decide as your own feelings and wishes direct you.

I could say much for myself and I could entreat a favorable consideration on my own behalf, but I purposely abstain from doing so because it would be only a repetition of an oft told tale and because I am sure nothing I could say would have the effect of influencing your decision in any degree whatever. Need I say that to me it is a matter of vital import and the most intense anxiety?

I fear that the numerous claims which must necessarily be made on your time and attention next week will prevent your answering this note within anything like the time which my impatience would name. Let me entreat you to consider your determination well whatever it be and let me implore you to communicate it to me as early as possible. As I am anxious to convey this note into the City in time to get it delivered today I will at once conclude by begging you to believe me. Yours sincerely,

CHARLES DICKENS

TAILER WIDOW TO WED LORD

Universal Service

Paris, April 24—Mrs. James B. Tailer, wealthy social-registerite widow of the late New York sportsman and banker, confided to friends today that she will marry Lord Doverdale this summer.

Universal Service learned exclusively that her romance with the British peer began in India several months ago when Mrs. Tailer and Lord Doverdale met while traveling in opposite directions on world cruises.

At that time Lord Doverdale's wife, the daughter of Viscount Elibank, was bringing suit against him for divorce, which was later granted on grounds of incompatibility.

Mrs. Tailer and Lord Doverdale, a large land owner and former alderman of the London City Council, will be married in London in July, when the present Lady Doverdales' decree becomes final.

Word List Ready For Big Spelling Test

By THE SPELLING BEE EDITOR

With but two full days remaining before the District Championships in the National and Metropolitan Spelling Bee, the carefully selected word list for this major test has been completed by the Boston Evening American and the Boston Sunday Advertiser and will be sent to the principals of all "Assembly" Schools tomorrow.

On Saturday and Monday lists were printed in the Boston American indicating the location of all "Assembly" Schools at which Friday's tests are to be given.

Committee to Study Text of Rushmore Epic

To assist those who have made a late start in the Mt. Rushmore Memorial Inscription Competition, sponsored by the Boston Evening American and Boston Sunday Advertiser, an outline of the competition is printed today.

President Roosevelt has accepted the chairmanship of the national committee that will determine the character of the inscription to be carved on the west wall of the Mt. Rushmore national memorial in the Black Hills of South Dakota.

This national committee will cooperate with the memorial commission in selecting 600 words of text for the inscription.

Based on nine historic episodes of birth and development of the nation, the inscription will constitute an American epic for the ages.

It will be cut in letters 13 feet high on the side of the mountain, opposite that on which colossal figures of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt are being carved.

Famous historians, educators, writers and men and women of affairs are serving on the committee that will judge the texts submitted in this national competition.

Students of colleges, universities, public and parochial schools are invited to compete for the scholarship and other prizes being offered in this unique tournament of national expression.

Adults in or out of school also may compete in the prizes offered in the competition.

Your entry may be sent to the Mount Rushmore Editor, 5 Winthrop sq., Boston.

The deadline for entries for students is May 12. Adults have a few weeks longer. Their deadline is May 30.

COUNCIL HOLDS UP CONSTABLES

Mayor Mansfield had nothing better than an even break to rejoice over today in the action of the city council on appointment of constables.

The council voted with the administration on its approval of 112 of a list of 164 recommended for appointment as constables. These will be paid by lawyers for the service of civil process.

However, the appointment of 58 constables, who will be assigned to city departments at an annual salary of $1440 was held up until next week by the council and announcement was made that confirmation would not be given until residences of the appointees was filed by the mayor.

DEWING NAMES MURTON AS KILLER AT NEEDHAM

Upham's Corner branch of the First National Bank, and Murton and Irving entered a deposit box which they employed there.

"We will show you that the next entry of that box revealed there was nothing there. We will show you that on Wednesday, Feb. 14, Murton went over to No. 117 Audubon rd., which was not far from his former residence on Bowdoin st., and there secured an apartment under the name of Harry Clifton and remained there in that apartment from Wednesday until two days later on Friday.

"We will show you that on Friday, Irving Millen and Murton Millen called a taxicab to the apartment, got into the taxicab with suitcases and were driven down to the Back Bay station—we will produce the taxicab driver in court—and were next seen in New York.

"There they saw Saul Messinger and we will show from the testimony of Saul Messinger the conversation Murton Millen had with him in regards to the Needham robbery and murders.

TRIP TO WASHINGTON

"We will show that they left New York on Sunday, February 18, and that they went from New York to Washington and that when they arrived at the terminal station in Washington, Murton Millen checked the machine gun which killed Forbes McLeod.

"We will show that they went to a place to live in Washington and that they rented a deposit box in the Hamilton National Bank in Washington under the name of Nelson. When they rented the Brinsley st. garage it was under the name of Nelson. And when they rented the box in Washington they used the names of Murton and Brudge Nelson. Irving is known as Brudge. We will show you that they left Washington the following Saturday."

The district attorney hopes, he said, to have the state's case amounting more than two score witnesses, concluded by next Monday night.

The case resumed in Norfolk County despite the federal court proceedings instituted late yesterday by George Stanley Harvey, counsel for the Millen brothers who followed up Judge Nelson W. Brown's denial of his motion for transfer to United States jurisdiction with application for a writ of habeas corpus to bring about the result the court frowned upon.

MILLEN'S GATES HOLD

For the first time since the trial started there was a lineup of would-be spectators outside the courthouse early this morning as the block at front entrance that line extending from the iron gates —east by Joseph Millen—to the sidewalk and bunching up toward the corner. Gate crashers attempted in vain to get past Sergt. Walter Readel on guard at the gates.

One of the early arrivals was Louis Berett, the newspaper pal with Clement Molway, was placed on trial at Salem for the Lynn theater holdup and murder. They were freed on a directed verdict of the court, proclaimed victims of mistaken identity and prosecutors of justice following the arrest of the Millens and Faber.

Berett stood on the rear stairs of the courthouse and silently watched the three prisoners arrive, except 10 o'clock Faber was wearing a new gray suit.

Mrs. Frank O. Haddock, widow of one of the victims, again was present Her sister, Mrs. Catherine Osborne of Wall st. Lynn, and her brother were with her.

Rev. Norman Brighton, Norma's father, arrived after 10.

Irving Millen was humming again, waiting for court to open. Murton's usual twisted smile was missing.

"We will show, gentlemen, that the bag checked at the station contained a woodsman 22-calibre pistol and we will establish that one of the two was used by Irving Millen in the Needham Trust holdup.

CAPTURE OF GUNS

"We will show you that upon opening the box in the Hamilton National Bank that money was recovered, which we will establish to your satisfaction was taken from the Needham Trust Company on Feb. 2. We will show you how the envelope which contained the money was marked under Murton's name.

"We will show you, gentlemen, that Murton went back to New York to confer again with Saul Messinger. That, as a result of this conference, Saul Messinger went to the Lincoln Hotel in company with New York police officers and Lt. Stokes of the Massachusetts state police. They waited in the lobby of the hotel and while that was going on, up in Boston if will be shown you that Abraham Faber was being questioned by Lt. Ferrari and Lt Michael Fleming.

"We will show you, gentlemen, that a letter that had been sent by Murton in Washington to New York to be forwarded to Faber was intercepted and we will show you that it was done with the approval of Faber. We will show that the letter said "pay the storage on the P. G. S." and we will establish that "the P. G. S." meant the police guns stored in the Brinsley st. garage

ARREST OF MILLENS

"We will show that Lt. Ferrari found shot guns, ammunition, gas bombs, gas shells and other things which I won't attempt to enumerate. They were all removed from the garage to the state house. That all happened on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25. And over in New York waiting were Lt. Stokes, Saul Messinger and New York police officers.

"Into the hotel lobby walked Irving Millen, and I will have here the officers who placed Irving Millen under arrest. They will testify that Irving Milen had his hand in his overcoat pocket and in that pocket was found a loaded pistol. They took him to a room for questioning and a short time later into the lobby walked Murton.

"We will have the officers here who placed Murton under arrest. And under the theory of consciousness of guilt, which His Honor will explain to you, I will show you by testimony of the officers, that with police guns thrust at him, he tried to get the gun away from the police officer. You will see what Murton Millen did when he found he was under arrest.

"We will show that there was a Chevrolet car outside the hotel which Murton had purchased in Washington. Inside that car was found a fully loaded .38-calibre revolver. I will bring here several witnesses who will testify what Murton said to them about where they were Feb 2 and what they did.

"I will also present, again on the theory of consciousness of guilt, certain actions. What they did and what they said while waiting for trial in Dedham jail.

LINK UP GUNS

"Capt. Charles Van Amburgh, state police ballistic expert, will satisfy you that bullet found in Officer McLeod were fired from the machine gun checked in Washington by Murton Millen. He will satisfy you that the machine gun in Murton's possession fired the fatal bullets. Capt. Hall also testify regarding the .22-calibre bullets and the shot gun fired by Faber while he was standing in the center of the bank and which struck Mr. Bartholomew.

"We will show to your satisfaction, gentlemen, that the three defendants went to the Needham Trust Co. on Feb. 2 commit robbery. They went prepared for anything. They went there determined to rob and they were determined they would not be caught alive. They went there prepared to shoot their way out and they did shoot it out. But there was something they forgot about.

"We will show that these three defendants are the ones who went to Needham and shot Forbes A. McLeod down in cold blood."

ARTHUR W. MORSE

MRS. EDNA LEAVETT

Arthur W. Morse, graduate of Harvard who pleaded guilty to the death of Mrs. Edna Leavett in his Greenwich Village apartment after a round of New York night clubs, was sentenced to from 8 to 20 years in prison today. Mrs. Leavett was a former Brookline society girl. (Picture from International News Photograph Service.)

8 TO 20 YEARS GIVEN MORSE

Arthur W. Morse, Wall Street broker, Harvard grad and former resident of Boston, was sentenced to from eight to twenty years in prison by a New York judge today for the slaying of Mrs. Edna Field Leavett, formerly of Brookline.

He had pleaded guilty to manslaughter in the first degree.

Mrs. Leavett was beaten and kicked during a row with Morse in an apartment in Greenwich Village on March 18, and died in Bellevue Hospital

She was 26 years old, and the divorced wife of Lawrence H. Leavett of Omaha.

The beating of the divorcee followed a round of night clubs, according to New York police.

Neighbors heard her screaming and called help before she was dead.

Mrs. Leavett left a five-year-old son, who will be reared by his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. William Atkinson, Summit ave., Brookline.

Referring to a plea for leniency made by counsel for Morse, in which the lawyer termed the case an unusual one, Judge Nott said it was not an extraordinary occurrence in general sessions court for men to come before the court who had killed women in an "alcoholic and sexual furor."

The judge pointed out that an autopsy showed 50 bruises on the woman's body

Maple Sugar Offers Many Modern Cookery Uses

By Martha Lee

The maple sugar season is here and we greet it enthusiastically! Sugar is such an ordinary and necessary form of food that we probably do not take into consideration the time when it was a luxury. It was only a little over a century ago that the manufacture of it from cane sugar began on a large scale and so it became a common article of food. As a nation, we consume more sugar per capita than any other, excepting Australia

Maple sugar was an invention of necessity by the pioneers of New England and Canada, and there are some who say it even goes back further than that—that maple sugar is an inheritance from the Indians who had a spring gala of a "sugar making moon."

The early settlers depended upon it for sweetening all their foods in place of honey, which was the standard sweetening of Europe before sugar was manufactured. Maple sugar is a natural sugar with a very delicate flavor

The time of "sugaring-off" was a great occasion; it was a social occasion, as well, for it meant the end of a cold, long winter. The townspeople would gather at the sugar camp to see the boiling down of the syrup and sugar. Basins of snow were brought in and the ladies full of the boiling syrup were poured on them when it had reached the right temperature, where it chilled and hardened at once to the great joy of the children.

Maple sugar, the sap from the maple trees, is found mostly in Vermont, New York and Pennsylvania, and the supply has been decreasing in the last few years. It has a great many uses as a confection and also as an addition to desserts. We probably use it more on pancakes and waffles, hot breads and biscuits; and a maple sugar shortcake is delicious served with whipped cream or serve it on hot tiny tea cakes or baking powder biscuits with a cup of tea. It can be used in frostings made like a boiled frosting using maple sugar in place of the sugar called for, and water, or it can be cooked to a cream frosting until it is of a fudge-like consistency and then beaten until it is enough to spread.

A maple parfait makes a delightful and rich dessert for the family or party meal.

MAPLE PARFAIT

4 eggs
1 pt. cream
1 cup hot maple syrup

Beat the eggs slightly and pour on slowly the maple syrup. Cook until the mixture thickens, cool and add the cream, beaten until stiff. Freeze in trays of refrigerator or pack in salt and ice, using three parts of ice to one part of salt, and let stand four hours.

MAPLE FROSTING

2 cups maple syrup
2 egg whites

Cook syrup until it will spin a thread (238 deg. F.). Beat egg whites and pour syrup in gradually. Set bowl in pan of hot water and continue beating until frosting is thick enough to spread. Two cups of maple sugar and one-half cup water may replace the syrup.

MAPLE TEA CAKES

1 cup maple sugar shavings
1-3 cup fat
1 egg
3 tsps. baking powder
½ tsp. salt
¼ cup sugar
½ cup milk
2 cups flour
½ cup finely chopped English walnuts

Cream the sugar and fat and add the well beaten egg. Sift the dry ingredients together and add alternately with the milk. Bake in small muffin tins in a moderate oven 20 minutes

MAPLE TOFFEE

Stir 2 cups of sugar, 2 cups of maple syrup, and one tablespoon of butter until sugar is dissolved. Boil until it forms a hard ball when tried on water. Pour into a well greased pan, cool quickly and as soon as cool enough to handle, pull until light. Cut in pieces and wrap in oiled paper. One cup of nuts cut in pieces may be pulled into the candy just before cutting.

INSULL STIRRED BY CABLEGRAM

Aboard S. S. Exilona, April 24 (INS)—Samuel Insull received a cablegram today—from whom he refused to say—but upon reading it he displayed emotion for the first time on his extradition voyage back to the United States.

Others aboard the ship wondered whether the message was from his lawyers, his wife, or someone else.

At each port Insull has had a batch of letters put ashore, including at least one for his wife, who is in Athens. The Exilona docked at Casabianca, Morocco, this afternoon and in preparation for this Insull spent the entire morning writing letters. The Exilona sails tonight for Boston and New York.

Insull was refused permission to go ashore at Casabianca.

"It's a nuisance to be kept aboard the ship," he commented.

NEW AIR MAIL BILL GIVEN UP

Washington, April 24 (AP)—Leaders today abandoned plans to obtain immediate House approval of a new, temporary air mail bill.

Chairman Mead (D., N. Y.) of the House postoffice committee said the bill which Congress had planned to put through the House this week had included two major objectives—to permit competitive bidding for airmail contracts and to create a special commission to study and determine upon a federal airmail policy.

"The postoffice department now has had competitive bids," he said. "Why should we pass a bill to give it something it already has?"

"About Friday," he said, "the situation should be clarified, for new contracts probably will be awarded by then."

'beacon hill'

By Betty Alden

CARRYING A BUNCH OF lilies of the valley, Miss Eleanor Gray Perry came out of the Leslie Lindsey Memorial Chapel yesterday on the arm of her new husband, Mr. Edward Rouzie Baird, Jr. She was beautifully gowned in a dress of heavy ivory satin, a family heirloom, and she was preceded by her adorable 10-year-old sister Louise, who made a mild sensation as maid of honor.

The wedding party was most colorful in yellow net, carrying yellow net muffs trimmed with yellow pansies and wearing hats of the same material. Small Louise was dressed in a yellow net gown with mitts to match, and carried a bouquet of yellow pansies and blue delphinium

Latest in Knit Suit Styles

WE DASHED INTO THE RUSSIAN BEAR YESTERDAY to get a birdseye view of the latest fashions and especially the knit suits and hats from the Knit Shop and Vera Bruno's respectively.

Among the models were petite Mrs. Morgan Harris taking so much time swirling and dipping around like a professional model she had to run to catch up to the music as she modelled a brown boucle hand knit brightened with candy strips at the throat and on the matching beret—later she stopped at the table where her mother-in-law was having rum cake with a friend to show her a pink and white angora ensemble which should have the place of honor in the smart bridal trousseau.

Mrs. John Yerxa—tall and lithe in a brown boucle with a smart shallow sailor.

Rice, was at one of the tables with a party of friends.

Gettysburg Is Hero of Modern Novel

By GILBERT SELDES

ABOUT a year ago MacKinlay Kantor wrote a poem about the battle of Gettysburg which seemed to me the first memorable utterance about that event since the speech which Lincoln made there. Now, taking the two words "long remember" from that speech as his title, he has written a novel in which the battle is virtually the hero, and the human beings, with their passions and interests, are secondary. I found it tremendously absorbing. It is published by Coward-McCann and is the Literary Guild's selection for May.

You can read certain books about the past without thinking of them as historical novels, and if you dislike historical novels this will please you. "Lon Remember" escapes the stuffiness of the historical novel because its two chief characters are essentially "modern" people, and Mr. Kantor's great success is in making us feel not only that they could have lived and felt as they did sixty years ago, but that there must have been thousands of people like them. His chief character is a pacifist; the woman whose life joins his is the unhappy wife of an army officer.

BUT, as I said, the battle is the main thing, and it is presented as half a dozen people who lived in Gettysburg saw and heard it, and suffered from it, and lived through it. The charges and the bombardments are there, but not in military terms. The retreat is something that happens through backyards, throwing down clothesline posts. Somewhere in the wheat field or orchard, as the battle rages, a soldier sees a sign warning that the full rigor of the law will be brought to bear on all who use fire-arms. The battle is not made trivial by being made human; there is plenty of valor as well as plenty of stupidity. A good book.

I HAVE only had John Dos Passos' "In All Countries" a few days, but somebody with a good eye has made off with it. But Dos Passos is so vivid a writer that you do not forget him. I recall the amusing confession of his incapacity to declare himself for or against the Revolution as he left Moscow and the far from amusing, brilliant, angry reporting of injustice in America. Harcourt, Brace, the publishers, ought to insist on a series —and to make Mr. Dos Passos travel —because he has covered only a handful of countries so far.

FOR contrast to the American section of Dos Passos' book, read "Rediscovering America," by Harold E. Stearns, who, most famous of our expatriates, now returned to be enchanted by America. Mr. Stearns uses so many things that he seems to turn on critics of America, although those critics may feel as successful in their battle, ten years hence, as Mr. Stearns feels today. (Liveright)

To An Unkind Lady

I TAKE you to Manhattan's haunts,
To theater, opera—yet you treat
Your escort just as if he were Less than the dust beneath your feet!

I take you to those hockey games
Where seats are prized like jewels rare
And still you will not let me kiss
Your slender hand, your dusky hair!

I take you shopping. (You are kind,
You let me buy some costly trifle!)
But you are deaf to words of love
My stammered hopes you bid me stifle!

I take you out, at your demand
To sundry night clubs, smart and shady,
You yawn at me!—Henceforth, I'll let
The devil take you, cruel lady!

—Norah Smaridge.

Haloes

SHE wore her halo rakishly,
Just a bit awry;
So stunets sought her as a friend
While good folk passed her by;
But God smiled broadly when she came
And joy was in the sky.

Another, with a conscious air,
Kept her halo straight,
They never caught her unaware
Without it, soon or late;
Yet Peter, when she came, was slow
To open up the gate!

Idella Purnell.

BY FRANK SULLIVAN

SOME years ago Wells Root, now of Hollywood, gave me for Christmas a box of one hundred cigarettes of a certain brand I had not known before. They seemed to my delighted palate to be the best cigarettes I had ever smoked. I refrain from mentioning their name because when I left home to seek fortune in the city I promised my pastor never to endorse a cigarette for less than $500.

These cigarettes have played and are playing a bigger part in my life than either Wells Root or I could have foreseen on that fateful Yule morn, when he said, "Merry Christmas, Frank; here's a little gift," and I replied, "Oh thanks, Wells. You know, of course, I never give presents myself."

THE cigarettes became almost immediately the sole luxury in my austere existence. I had been a man of innately simple tastes. My idea of gourmet fare was a crust of bread and a glass of milk with a fly to it. Money never meant anything to me except happiness, economic independence, freedom from anxiety, and the means to about ninety per cent of all the ends a reasonable man would want to reach.

The charm of motor cars, first editions, priceless paintings and foreign travel eluded me and, as for wine, I have not lifted a glass of it to my lips since the day they invented the Lazy Toper's Pal, that invaluable little block and tackle device which lifts a glass of wine from the table or bar automatically and pours it down the throat without the toper having to crook so much as a little finger.

BUT since that Christmas I have had to have one luxury—those cigarettes, no matter what sacrifices my dependents might have to make. And it was not long after I started carrying a supply of them that I discovered they had a universal and definitely predictable effect on ninety-eight per cent of all the people I met. I found that if I opened my cigarette case to help myself to one of my favorites and then courteously offered one of them to the person nearest me his or her reaction would invariably be the same.

They reach for the proffered cigarette. Then they see it is a brand they do not know. Then they eye it critically, and note that it is fat, skillfully packed and obviously superior. Then, in a slightly bored, supercilious tone, they say, "Oh, not those expensive ones' I like cheap cigarettes." Then they shove the fag back into my case

WHY this behavior should make the hair on my mane bristle I fail to see. Shouldn't I be relieved that my cigarettes are pariahs because they are good? The fewer of them the cheap-cigarette addicts puff the more I'll have for myself. And I hope I will not seem sordid if I add that the financial strain is materially eased by this offishness on the part of my smoking friends.

I am very courteous by nature; it would not be an overstatement at all to say that I am courteous upwards of a thousand times a year. Now, my cigarettes cost me two and three-quarters cents apiece so that if, every time I am courteous, people accepted my costly fags instead of smooting them my bill for courtesy alone would run to $27.50 a year. And that $27.50, unlike Sidney Blackmer's suppers for critics, would not be deductable on my income tax return.

I REALLY ought to be pleased about the whole thing, for the fact of the matter is that the refrain has grown very tiresome and I am on the defensive about my poor cigarettes. My back is against the wall. In fact, I am at bay, and in an ugly mood and sooner or later when somebody snoots my perfectly good cigarettes I am going to haul off and hit him or her a sock on the beezer.

Furthermore, I am convinced that they are all poseurs. Prefer cheap cigarettes indeed! I'd like to see one of these economical lasses to a Fifth Avenue gown shop and offer her a $500 evening wrap. But I'd hate to have to hang by the neck until I heard her say, "Oh, no thanks; not that expensive one. I prefer this cheap little gingham number."

GOOD PREJUDICES

A Defense of Certain Ones Rising From Emotions

From EMIL LUDWIG

LOCARNO.—One of our chief prejudices is our mistrust of prejudice. There are more men than women who have the unjust contempt for prejudice, because as a general thing men overrate logic and women overrate intuition. Everyone builds up his system of thought on the basis of his own weaknesses; it is only the strong who are exceptions. A man without prejudice is too cold-blooded to be likable or even truly intelligent; a woman without prejudice is insufferable.

Naturally I am not talking about the commonplace prejudices, reiterated thousands upon thousands of times, that are good enough for the scatter-brained mob which must always have someone else to do its thinking for it. That type of bias is the mere result of a fad, of perpetuating an error. It is always derived from a generalization. A war makes one nationality despise another, or a travel book spreads some notion about a people, or the astonishing career of some man begets a prejudice for or against the country or profession to which he belongs.

"What charming people the Poles are!" a woman said to me, after Paderewski had kissed her hand. "Born swindlers, these Hungarians!" asserted my friend, because a man in Budapest had cheated him of 10 pengo when exchanging currency for him. From that stage to the assertion that all Frenchmen are stingy and all Englishmen hypocritical is not far to go.

Anyone who can't think and who avoids all false conclusions is able to find hundreds of others glad to share his prejudices with him. People instinctively find it easier and pleasanter to imitate weakness and error than sound sense and goodness.

I AM not referring to these widespread prejudices. I mean the involuntary, untaught, groundless prejudices, having no basis in tradition, that suddenly come over us when we meet people, particularly people of the opposite sex. Actually they are intuitions: Women, and especially children, even clever dogs, have infallible intuitions for or against people, and their presentiment can serve as a kind of helpful hint to those who lack their gifts.

This factor has been decisive in bringing together and in estranging statemen and, therefore, indirectly, nations. Politics, for example, are not politics at all without the influence of women—the real motivation of latuhon. Statesmen who boast of being independent of women s influence are deceiving themselves, for in political life, which is only a magnified kind of business existence, everything is surrounded by influences, prejudices, premonitions, and is frequently determined by them.

One of the last ministers of the Austro-Hungarian Empire said to me when his friend became premier: "How can they form a cabinet? He hasn't any mistress, not even a wife, to advise him!"

ALL these prejudices arise out of the most finespun and incommunicable feelings, and ought always to be trusted. They have an emotional bearing, for example, upon the meeting of two complete adult men, for in the last analysis the first encounter of two strangers always involves the problem of love.

When you enter a group of strangers a voice within you will warn you at once against a face, a gesture or the sound of a voice, while at the same time it beckons you encouragingly in some other direction. The manner or the phrase with which a stranger enters a room can at once determine the course of one's lifttime in so far as, drawn to him at once, one disposed toward a greater intimacy, from which business relationships, friendship, or (if a woman) love, marriage and progeny may result

Such a prejudice that arises within us spontaneously from pure emotion, uninfluenced by imitation, fashion or vanity, bears a morsel of truth in it.

"....and you are hereby reprimanded for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman."

MODERN DANGERS

By CLARENCE DAY

Illustrations by the Author

THE more civilized and settled the world becomes the more dangerous it gets. Before men learned how to build shelters they were at the mercy of storms. Nowadays, when great storms come, nearly all of us have homes we can sleep in, but we are completely at the mercy of a new kind of tempest—great, business depressions. The cavemen didn't have to bear storms as long and violent as these

Another example: In ancient times travelers were in peril from the attacks of wild beasts. In the civilized lands of today there are no wild beasts to dread, but travelers are attacked instead by strange laws, which have had teeth put in them by legislators

A traveler in Georgia may take a bath only in certain ponds on the Sabbath. If he happens to use one which is visible from a road leading "to or from" a church he's arrested. Cavemen could bathe where they liked

In Delaware a man mustn't walk on a road after dark without carrying a lantern or tying a white cloth on his arm

In Maine he breaks a law if he asks a motorist to give him a ride

AT elections in Florida a voter must get out of a voting booth in five minutes. If he stays in for six by mistake, he can actually be put into prison.

A year or two ago if a man had any gold he felt pretty safe about keeping the wolf from the door Nowadays if he has any gold he is not safe at all, because a newly-created and much larger wolf will walk right in and bite him. The law which makes it an offense against the Government to own any gold. But this is a law which is powerful enough to enforce

Most of the other new laws are easy to observe, unless of a man who is about them, or is as most of the wild beasts of ages ago were easy to escape from by climbing a tree. But a man of today has to be much more wide awake and on guard than a caveman

If the owner of a motor so much as changes his address without notifying the Motor Bureau, the penalty in some States is one day year in a jail

These penalties are not often enforced, but they're there. Think of it one year in jail! How can good-hearted men sit in our Legislatures and be so fierce as all that? Do they love to be cruel? Why do they spend their time creating these savage laws and letting them loose on us? You would almost suppose they were fiends

Isn't life harsh enough without lawmakers making it harsher?

We have grown so used to this now that we think nothing of it In the Middle Ages nobody was shocked at cruelties which now make us shudder But our descendants may find our ways as dungs some day with wonder and feel thankful that they were not born in these blood-

How somebody, at the tension attained nowadays on the stage in moments of the leading lady's anguish. Where do we see furniture furiously destroyed, as it was in that great last act of Zira, and when do we witness a murder scene like that which Mrs. Fiske went through in Tess of the D'Urbervilles?

WIDE-BRIMMED SAILOR GIVES TAILORED SUIT AN UNUSUAL CHIC AIR

Given in Marriage

By Adele Garrison

CHAPTER 20

AS I OUTLINED the course which I thought Noel ought to pursue with Mary, the boy's face lighted as might a man's who has just received a reprieve on the way to the death chair.

"Can I do that?" he echoed fervently. "I could go on my knees to her, if she can will forgive me for my stupidity. I can see now that what I thought was generosity must have sounded to her like indifference."

In a panic, I raised myself to a sitting posture.

"Don't let her guess that you know how she feels," I advised him, uttering a mental anathema upon all the women's clubs "Teacher only of your own feelings. Tell her that you tried hard to keep back a protest against her going, because you thought it would be unnecessary to hold her back. But tell her that every minute makes it worse; that you simply cannot stand it. Then, as I told you before, if she mentions the paper and Georges, show her that you are jealous of Georges, as you are. You won't have to put up any pretense about that, Noel."

A MENTAL SUGGESTION

"No, I know that," he admitted shamefacedly. "But" with a sudden thought, "you know what will happen if she refuses to go, don't you? Father promised you he would continue her training as a future Veritzen star, but you know his invariable rule with all of his potential stars. A refusal to obey him in any respect means a cancellation of everything."

"I know," I said, chafing at the promise Mary extracted from me that I would say no word to Noel of the marriage, which I was sure was the only possible way of foiling Philip Veritzen's scheme to separate the young lovers. If only Noel would think of it himself

I have no particular faith in mental suggestion but, desperate—knowing no other resource—I fixed my eyes upon his face and mentally willed that he comprehend my thought.

"What is it?" he said in a startled voice. "You look as though you wanted to tell me something, but didn't quite dare. Is it about Mary—something worse than all this, that you haven't told me?"

"No," I said emphatically. "It is something about Mary, but not anything alarming. Indeed, exactly the opposite. And I do want to tell you, but I do not dare, because of a promise."

NOEL GETS THE IDEA

I kept my eyes fixed on him, and whether he caught a mental wave from me, or because his own wish was so near the surface that he expressed it, he stammered:

"Do you mean that Mary and I might marry? Oh, Mrs. Graham! Is her with you, does it? Would you give your consent?"

I waived my right hand high above my head

"Hurrah! Hurrah, Noel!" I said. "I was afraid you'd never say it. I not only consent to your marriage, but I strongly advise it. To me it seems to be the only way in which you can thwart your father's plot. There is no other word to describe it. I am sure that the only reason he wishes Mary to study abroad just now is because of the presence of Georges in Paris. He never has given up hope of having a royal daughter-in-law, and he is grasping the present chance of upsetting things with glee."

"But fortunately for you, he left the time of your marriage entirely in my hands, and if you and Mary come and ask me about it, I shall say that you can be married tomorrow if you wish, although I would prefer that you wait a few days so that I can give you a pretty home wedding down at the farm.

"Every girl is entitled to a wedding, and Mary especially. As much of her life will doubtless be spent in the public eye, she will prize the memory of a quiet home wedding—not just a trip to a minister."

"It is all in your hands," he said fervently. "I am so crazily glad at the prospect of marrying Mary so much sooner than I expected, that I am scarcely responsible. But what effect do you think it will have on my father?"

VERITZEN WILL BE FURIOUS

"He will be furious, inside," I said, smiling a bit maliciously as I thought of Philip Veritzen's discomfiture. "But I don't think he can say or do anything immediately spiteful. I guess so far as your interest in Mary's career is concerned, and I leave no room for doubt with Mary should go over for a year's study."

"You don't know my father," Noel said gloomily, "if you think the marriage will make any difference in that plan. He will be vindictive enough to insist that Mary go, just as he has arranged."

"But you have a wonderful rod in pickle for just that very emergency," I told him. "It may involve some sacrifice on your part—"

"Sacrifice!" Noel exclaimed. "I would be cut up in inch pieces for Mary."

"I know that, Noel" I said, "and it may involve cutting up your career, it is only a probability, however. I believe that if you present a certain ultimatum to your father, he will yield the point of Mary's foreign training for this time."

A Sweater for Your Spring Suit

IN THE SPRING, one's fancy inevitably turns to chic blouses and sweaters to wear with street suits or sport skirts. They are a tonic in themselves, and even more so when you make them yourself. If you have made yourself one of the new crepe paper crocheted hats, you know how wearable and delightful this blouse must be. Our smiling model made this one in a combination of brown and chartreuse to match her new brown suit, the chartreuse forming the ascot and epaulettes. To receive directions for making this sweater, without charge, write to Annice Brink, Boston Evening American, inclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Classic Vagabond Felts Best With Increasingly Popular Shirtwaist Frocks

By Dorothy Roe

DESPITE THE DOLLY VARDEN air of many new Spring hats, the girl who likes her headgear tailored may still find brimmed felts and panamas in the newest showings, innocent of feathers or frills. Classic brimmed sports hats in pastel felts still form the smartest finishing touch to the simple shirtmaker frocks of Summer, and though you may see the season's touch in shallower crowns and wider brims, they're still the simple, becoming shapes that have brought comfort to the hearts of tailored women for lo! these many moons.

Panamas are to be important this season also, especially a new featherweight kind, called summerlite, which comes in various styles—from cartwheels to vagabond shapes. For summer afternoons there is a vastly becoming wide-brimmed panama with medium brim, "which means that it is narrow in back, hugging the nape of the neck and flaring out into the approved wide brim in front."

The shallow brimmed panama sailor also is slated for the head of the parade this summer, closely followed by the classic sports shape with dipped brim and creased crown.

The new panamas have gaily striped grosgrain ribbon bands called "blazer stripes," and you may get them in school, club or yacht colors.

If the men who clamored "down with women in masculine attire" were sincere, this will be their happy season. The spirit this summer is picturesqueness—the hats have an intoxicating air.

The cartwheel gives a gay garden party air to any costume, and the first wide-brimmed sailor which appeared above a neat tailored suit dazzled even the fashion experts.

Crowns have come down as conspicuously as brims have shot out. The average hat crown this summer is between one and two inches.

Cinderella of Fashion Is Alpaca

ALPACA, that humble fabric once restricted to office coats for bookkeepers and Sunday best dresses for stern old ladies, is another Cinderella of fashion suddenly lifted out of the kitchen to take its place as the darling of the stylists.

Hats, frocks, coats, handbags and even shoes are being fashioned of this time-honored fabric this season, and the well-dressed debutantes are eating them up.

Checked alpaca makes one of the year's goggliest sports frocks, cut in simple shirtwaist fashion, with a wide collar and Windsor tie, and worn with a fingertip length double-breasted reefer of the same material in solid color. Navy and white is a favorite color combination, running neck and neck with brown and white.

The alpaca Breton sailor, in navy, brown or black, makes a striking new spring bonnet when trimmed with band and piping of patent leather.

The solid color alpaca sailor suit, in navy blue, with white linen collar and the usual nautical emblems, is a knockout when it consists of double-breasted jacket, slim skirt and white middy blouse.

Alpaca is substituted for tweed or gabardine in some of the new fabric walking shoes, with calf tie or patent leather trim, and the handbags, as always, match.

They're even showing a white alpaca evening jacket, cut on tuxedo lines, with satin lapels And it has an equally effective twin in black

The Cottons Are Coming!

IN THE MIDST of what appears to be the greatest of all seasons for cottons in recent years, there are a number of interesting developments that are of unusual character. The familiar bromide that "things aren't what they used to be" has no more fitting application than in the style uses of cottons this Spring.

Emerging from the merry fashion mix-up of the past few years are many weaves of cottons that are seldom recognized for their original purposes. For example, there is the new waffle weave coating. Actually, it is from the same looms and with slight variations from the "seersepane" bedspreads that set apart the "spare room" of earlier generations. Now it's being worn by gay young things for flinging over their shirt-'n'-shorts costumes or other modern sports attire.

Then again the draperies and curtains that are high-style today are stepped over the border line from wearables to drapables, and are smartly sophisticated. So to turn the tables, some clever women are reversing the process and adopting chintz for dress purposes. The newest "confection de la mode" is none other than a saucy little cape made of chints that will undoubtedly be widely copied.

Seersucker has a fascinating "case history." all its own. First in Summer bedspreads, then in men's suits, next for women's underwear, now in all types of feminine apparel and accessories, and finally it makes its debut this Spring in novelty luncheon sets that are quite captivating.

Whether milady chooses the novelty cottons for use in new ways—or selects the classic cottons for conventional uses, it is none the less true that cottons are sought this Spring as never before in all their delightful textures and patterns.

Belief in Self and Parents Gives Child Happiness

By LISA GRENELLE

A child must believe in himself, in his parents and in life, in order to attain success and happiness

Teach your child to believe in himself by believing in him and showing it. Inspire him to live up to your belief in him; teach him to be ashamed to do less

And besides believing in themselves and in God, Janie and Jimmie must be taught to believe in life—the richness and the happiness that it should contain for them.

Perhaps life hasn't taught you to expect happiness, but has taught you instead that it "doesn't pay" to be good, or kind, or even honest. But if that is the sort of teaching you are going to pass along to Jimmie and Janie, you are not defending them but seriously, handicapping them.

Because they need to believe in life; they have so much of it ahead of them, so many duties, so many fails, so many adjustments. How can they tackle it all without a belief that it is worth while? In due course they will get their own disillusionments. But don't start them out burdened with yours.

"Children need to be warned for their own protection," did you say? No. The greatest protection they can have is belief—including belief in their fellowman, deserved or not. Because the average man or woman lives up to his fellows' opinion of him.

If your children go out into the world believing in it, they will find all kinds of proof that their belief is justified.

Squeezing Out Defense Players

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

To bid and make a Grand Slam gives to any player a thrill, whether or not the bidding process by which the contract was reached can be defended from every standpoint. But to make a Grand Slam by means of a progressive squeezing out of the defense of both opponents is an achievement that gives a thrill even to the most seasoned veteran.

Every month at Crockford's Club in New York the experts of the Metropolis gather in a game to which only experts are admitted, and in one of the recent sessions the hand below was played. Naturally, the North-South experts had no difficulty in reaching a Small Slam on their magnificent holdings, but one of the experts, John Sherman, played with Horace Block, was raised at a Grand Slam contract, which, of course, was presented with a difficult problem to play correctly to make sure of the contract.

Both sides vulnerable.

	♠AQ165 ♡AK7 ◇K195 ♣8
♠872 ♡Q8 ◇QJ10764 ♣762	North / West East / South	♠K9 ♡J106542 ◇A832 ♣5
	♠1043 ♡93 ◇— ♣AKQJ10943

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
4♣	Pass	4♠	Pass
7♠	Pass	7♣	Double
Pass	Pass	Pass

The bidding [illegible] when the last trump was led he was forced to choose between retaining the spade King and his three hearts to the Knave.

In the meantime Mr. Sherman had discarded in Dummy all of the spades, and on the last trump the last diamond. West at no time had held any protection except in the diamond suit, but the diamond had been retained in Dummy in case he held three hearts.

The hand, played in this manner, produced 13 tricks. Naturally those playing for a Small Slam did not have presented to them the same problem and hence quite naturally played instead for the spade finesse, which lost.

Daily Suggestion for Self-Improvement

In entering a restaurant a woman should always precede her masculine escort when there is a head waiter to lead them to a table. Otherwise the man should go first in order to select a suitable table,

Plans For Home Wedding

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

My mother and father are dead. I am twenty-three years of age and am the youngest of nine children. I am living at our family home keeping house for my brother. I intend to be married at home this spring. Including only our immediate families and close friends, there will be about twenty-five guests at the wedding.

1. For our announcements, my fiance and I intend to announce our marriage ourselves. That is, "Mr. E. C. G. and Miss Elsie A. Wood announce their marriage," and so forth. Would that be proper?

2. Then about our attendants. Would it be legal and proper for us to be married unattended? There would be many witnesses there and we could just have several of them put their signatures on the necessary papers. The reasons we would like to be married this way are that we don't seem to agree upon whom the attendants shall be, and, what is more important, it will cut the expense of another gown and extra flowers.

READER.

1—Yes, you may word the announcement in this way . . . it is sometimes done. But since your brother is older, and you have lived with him during these years, wouldn't you like to have him make the announcement? I'm sure that he would appreciate the honor that you give him, and it would give charming dignity and distinction to your announcement. Like this:

Mr. Thomas Wells Wood has the honor of announcing the marriage of his sister Elsie Agatha
to

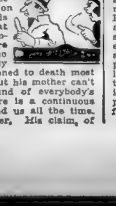
2—It is not necessary for you or your groom to have attendants, although even if the bride doesn't have an attendant, the groom usually has a best man. I may add, answering your last sentence, that the bride isn't supposed to furnish the dress and dress-accessories for her attendants; so there would be only the flowers, and even these could be dispensed with.

Pandora Tells You

DEAR PANDORA:

We have an automobile and it has nothing to do with pleasure. My husband drives it, or at least, sits at the wheel and how he ever passed his tests is a subject of wonderment even to his mother, now 94. We get him to go off on country roads and we stop at picnics the moment we are out of traffic for not only are we frightened to death most of the time, but his mother can't stand the sound of everybody's horn and there is a continuous blasting around us all the time. And no wonder, his claim, of course, is that he has never had an accident and just is merely a testimonial to all the other drivers in eastern Massachusetts. The thing that will absolutely fasten you to that has blood to drive. What do you suggest, Officer?

MARTHA.



DEAR MARTHA:

The treatment must begin in the home for those people are absolutely unmanageable the minute a motor begins to hum. He probably doesn't do anything around the house anyway, so constant y relieve him of every task, explaining that he looks tired out anyway. The same thing will apply to driving, when the old mad light appears in his eyes. The thing must be done carefully, for it is very difficult to drag pediculous drivers from their favorite seat—they have to be weaned.

LIQUID BEAUTY MASK NOT ONLY TIGHTENS MUSCLES BUT IS MILDLY BLEACHING

This New England Winter Has Been Hard on Skins, So Decide on Care

By Carol Ames

THE ETERNAL FEMININE desire to look charming and attractive isn't a selfish one In fact, to most of us keeping attractive and well-groomed often means a real sacrifice of time, energy and money. But find me a woman who'll say it isn't worth the effort!

When a woman knows she looks her best she's much less apt to be upset by the disturbing little "pin-pricks" of daily life. She has a certain serene composure which gently lifts her over the rough places . . . and realizes that by looking her most charming, by having clear, sparkling eyes and a fresh skin she's doing her bit to spread good cheer in this old world of ours.

Every day scores of you write to me, imploring help with perplexing beauty problems. Sometimes it's a case of hair that needs reconditioning before a permanent . . . or perhaps that important manner of losing those extra few pounds which crept on stealthily this winter, and make such unflattering bulges under a new spring outfit.

This last few weeks, however, I've noticed that readers' letters most often are about complexion ills of one sort or another. Perhaps it's a sensitive, dry skin that's beginning to line after exposure to the severe winter weather we had here in New England . . . or a "tired" face which needs reconditioning before it dares brave this spring's bright colors . . . sagging, droopy muscles . . . complexions which have somehow become muddy and dark, and need gentle whitening.

Whatever your skin problem—no matter what type complexion you may have—it's high time you worked out a skin-care regime to fit its particular needs if you haven't done so already—and then stick to it faithfully through fair weather or foul . . . rain or shine.

As I've told you so often before (but I consider it important enough to bear repeating), proper cleansing is the first step toward lovely, youthful complexions. With that as a starting point you can easily work out the corrective treatment your skin needs.

Just in time to help tired winter faces becomes more alluring, I've run across a grand lotion I must tell you about. It's marvelous for tightening droopy muscles, and at the same time gently bleaches the skin. Sort of a beauty mask in liquid form, I guess you'd call it. It's intended for use after cleansing the skin, and should be allowed to remain on for about fifteen minutes before washing off with luke-warm water. This "plastic youthifying lotion" has a refreshing, exhilarating effect—and is not a bit expensive. Easy to use, too.

Wouldn't you like to know the name of this beauty preparation and the one place where it may be found in Boston? For this information, just telephone to Carol Ames, Liberty 4000. If you prefer writing, be sure to enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Terraces Are Popular

TERRACES are increasingly popular—and they need not be the painful, villa-on-the-Riviera type to be satisfactorily beautiful. A terrace proves most useful when it fits snugly to the house, in fact, almost a part of it.

A southern or eastern exposure is desirable, if the house is near a street or road, for the sake of privacy and comfort it is best to place the terrace at the rear. An ideal architectural is where two walls border the terrace. A hedge, low wall or open screen of lattice may form the other boundaries. Brick, gravel or stone are best and any one is effective. Open spaces left for trees or flowers.

All-Shade Plants for Garden

YOU MAY HAVE a lovely, flowering spot even though your garden has more than its share of shade. Here are some shade plants that will make a cool, fragrant and inviting darker garden plot: ajugasum, arabis and phlox subulata, bloodroot, myosotis, lily-of-the-valley, Joe Pye Weed, nertenesia, trilliums, cypripediums, iris, and aconite.

When Children get Out-of-Sorts

Fretful; "peevish" young ones who eat too much sweets or rich food often develop worms and constipation.

Dr. True's Elixir

Laxative Worm Expeller

Mrs. Connelley's Daughter

"My neighborhood druggist recommended Dr. True's Elixir to me . . . I purchased a bottle and gave some to my little girl.

I consider it unequaled as a children's laxative, regulator and worm expeller, and recommend it to all mothers."—Mrs. R. W. Connelley, 11 Franklin Ct., Malden.

Signs of Worms . . . Constipation, deranged stomach, swollen upper lip, offensive breath, hard and full stomach.

Successfully used for 81 years.

Answers to Your Beauty Problems

Underweight

I am very much underweight. Can you suggest a diet that would help me?—A. H. G., Stoughton.

I would suggest that you try to take a quart of milk every day. If you cannot drink this much plain milk, take it in cream soups, puddings, etc. A tablespoonful of olive oil before luncheon and dinner will help you put on weight.

The following drink is highly recommended for those who are underweight—

Three times a day, add this to your meal: into two or three tablespoonful of heavy cream, blend one heaping tablespoonful of pure, strained honey. Half fill a tall glass to within two inches of the top with whole or unskimmed milk—fill the glass to the top with ginger ale—stirring all together until the drink foams.

The honey supplies wholesome energy, although it is non-fattening in itself; the cream adds weight and the ginger ale insures the easy digestion of the cream.

Tissue Creams

Just what is a "nourishing tissue cream" and "stimulating skin tonic?" When should they be used?

Can you recommend a treatment, or special shampoo, for oily hair addicted to dandruff?—M. B., Dedham.

A nourishing tissue cream is composed of rich oils and other ingredients. It is to be used at night after cleansing, and left on to help counteract any tendency to dryness and lines.

The purpose of a stimulating skin tonic is to tone the skin, improve circulation and close the pores. This is used in the morning after the cleansing of skin, or may be used any time of the day.

A good treatment for oily hair addicted to dandruff is crude oil, followed by a tar soap shampoo. Have the oil warm and massage it well into the scalp, leaving on as long as convenient. Wash in several waters, using the tar soap shampoo. Rinse well and dry.

Salt Massage

Can you give me some information on the following:

Special body massage with cold cream and salt; cornmeal and buttermilk bleach; oatmeal for bathing.—D. C., Gloucester.

For the body massage with cold cream and salt, you simply mix salt with cold cream and massage it well into the skin

For the cornmeal and buttermilk bleach, make enough corn meal with half a cup of buttermilk to make a paste, not soft enough to run. You can use a mask of cheesecloth to keep it in place.

To use oatmeal for bathing, enclose it in cheesecloth bags. You can make several at a time and use one for each bath.

Superfluous Hair Bleach

I have a lot of hair growing on my nose. I have used ammonia and peroxide but it causes my skin to become scaly.

Will this bleach kill the roots if used regularly?

Does a specialist in this line remove each hair separately, or can all the hair be removed at once?—M. F., Auburndale.

The bleach you are using will not kill the roots of the hair, although it will in time deaden the growth and lighten it so that it will be less noticeable. After using the bleach apply cream to counteract any tendency to dryness or a sensitive condition. When a specialist removes hair it is treated one hair at a time. By this method the roots are destroyed permanently.

Be sure to select a good operator, if you have this done. A licensed, reputable operator who is well recommended should be employed.

Nail Polish

Question: I am a faithful reader of your interesting and helpful column. I am going to a few college proms this winter. My evening dress is of pale green moire. What color nail polish would be appropriate? My eyes are nearly black. What color eye shadow should I use, and how is it applied? — Miss R. C., Somerville.

Answer: It's largely a matter of personal choice what shade polish you choose. The main thing is to select a shade which won't clash with the color of your frock or the lip rouge you use.

One way to avoid becoming eye shadow is to get one the same color or a little deeper than the eyes. Rub since your plan to wear a pale green evening frock you might find a soft, pretty green vastly flattering. Eye shadow should be used sparingly, and only on the upper lids—never under the eyes or on the lower lids. Experiment in front of your mirror before you try out the effect on your friends.

BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION YOURS

COMPLEXION PROBLEMS are common these spring days. The past winter was a severe one on facial beauty, but now that Balmy breezes and sunny days are close at hand it is time to wipe away the ravages of the wintry blasts and the first step is in proper cleansing. Miami Jordan, one of screenland's favorites, knows the value of a pure complexion.

CHICKIE'S DAUGHTER

By Elenore Meherin

CHAPTER 65

Pippin sat at her desk turning sheets of yellow paper.

Paula Meade took the cigarette from her mouth, blew the smoke upward and pouted. Paula was petite and seductively small. She had dewy brown eyes and a pink mouth that was small but very full. She wore her soft brown hair always in a Dutch cut with the bangs coming down almost to her eyebrows. Paula knew and emphasized every winsome inflection of voice, face and form. Just now she wore a white sport dress which too plainly revealed her budding figure.

"You've been turning those pages for an hour, Pippin! You haven't said a word. Don't you think it's pretty good?"

Pippin glanced up, noted the languid movie-actress air with white Paula blew the smoke from her lips, noted with a flash of anger the white silk clinging to Paula's figure. She said with much more heat than she intended:

"It's impossible!"

Paula slowly pressed the lighted end of her cigarette into the ash tray.

THE WAY IT STARTED

"Professor Brown didn't seem to think it was impossible. He told me to work it over. I thought you could probably give me a few suggestions, Pippin."

"I do, of course."

"Then you have to change the idea and brighten the lines."

Paula pouted and protested.

"I worked for weeks and weeks getting this thing together. I don't want to throw it all overboard."

"But you'll have to, Paula. This is really dull."

That was the way it started. The campus magazine had a contest for one-act plays. Paula Meade wanted to enter, but she had no experience. She coaxed and implored Pippin to help her.

Pippin, busy with her own work, refused. But in a weak moment she read over Paula's effort. She changed this character, then that. She worked two or three evenings until midnight. Before long she was blazing with interest. Paula's idea was entirely discarded. Pippin substituted one of her own.

For three nights Paula worked along with Pippin. Then she grew restless. She wanted to go dancing. Men waited for her in the living room. She would run down the stairs with excuses, then run back, work ten or fifteen minutes, then run down again.

Soon Pippin was saying to her: "Either go out and keep your dates or stay here and work You can't do both."

After much protesting and fuming, Paula kept her dates. Pippin didn't really care. She had a good idea. The lines came bubbling and bright. The whole thing was hers and she knew it. She was glad to be free of Paula.

PAULA HAS A DATE

Kathleen had plenty to say. "Why should you do all the work, Pippin, and let her horn in on the glory? You know she hasn't contributed a word."

"But she suggested going in for it."

"Oh, yes, and if you win she'll take all the credit! Why don't you submit it alone?"

I can't do that now. We've started it together, and, anyway, it's a lot of fun."

But the last night Pippin said to Paula: "Now you stick around here and we'll polish up the whole thing."

It's polished enough. How can you be so sure you're right, Pippin? Those lines don't sound any better to me than the ones you've scratched out."

But they are better. Paul's You can begin the typing."

I have a date with Archie Ramsey. We're going to the city dancing."

"But the play has to be submitted by tomorrow afternoon, Paula. It will be a pip, but we've simply got to work the rest of the night on it."

Paula went to the phone, pretended to ring up Archie Ramsey. She came back and said to Pippin.

"I can't reach him. Can't we work on this tomorrow?"

No, we can't! I have an anatomy lab exam eight till twelve and pathology from one to five. If you want the glory of writing this play you can give up the pleasure and we can get it finished by midnight. After all, Paula, you started this. You got me into it."

PIPPIN ANGRY

"Why, I only wanted you to help me a little, Pippin! I think the skit is r'l right now. I'm going to submit it just as it is."

Pippin looked at her in surprise. "YOU'RE going to submit it?"

"Oh, don't get sore, Pippin. I'm grateful for the help you've given me and all that, but after all, as you just finished saying, I started it and I had the idea."

Pippin looked at her with narrowed eyes and flaming cheeks.

"Let's get this straight right now, Paula. The plot is mine. You helped write some dozen lines. The rest is written entirely by me. You were not even present. Have you the nerve to think you'll submit it as suits your pleasure and I have nothing to say?"

Paula winked very rapidly.

"What are you getting so angry about, Pippin? Of course you have something to say. I only meant that it's a darby as it is. We'll spoil it if we work over it any more."

"All right, Paula. You go dancing. I'll finish up the skit but you've got to type it tomorrow."

Pippin worked until two o'clock that morning. The one-act play was finished. She thought it a gem. It was gay with a breezelike, singing quality. The best thing she had ever done. She felt very proud.

"It's really lovely, mother," she told Helena.

She sent a carbon copy to Gregg and joyfully read passages to Janina and Kevin.

THE BLOW FALLS.

Two weeks later the magazine was published.

"Amazon Isle," a one-act play by Paula Meade, received the prize. The morning and evening newspapers of San Francisco carried pictures of Paula. They quoted from the play.

There was no mention of Pippin's name.

When Kathleen laid the magazine on Pippin's desk she stared at it, white and shaking from head to foot.

What did I tell you?" said Kathleen, smothered with fury. I knew that little cheater would crook you somehow.

They went to Paula

Pippi said "You typed off the play. How did you come to omit my name? That's worse than thievery."

Paula started to speak, changed her mind and stuttered: "I can't remember. I don't know how it happened."

The went to Colleen Lowell, who was the head of the contests. Colleen made Paula admit just what had happened.

Colleen said "I've had enough of your kind of cheating! What DID you do? You either tell it here or I'll have it blazed all over the campus. Take your choice."

PAULA CONFESSES

After a long hot hour, Paula admitted the facts. She had typed the play and deliberately left off Pippin's name. But really the idea was hers! She had a darby of a skit all written. It was better than the prize winner! It would have won Pippin threw it overboard. And after all, she was the one who suggested entering the contest.

And yes, she had posed for the newspapers. She had taken all credit. Also she had been notified six days previous that "Amazon Isle" had won. She had not shared the happy news with Pippin, nor told anyone that Pippin was a co-author.

The skit would be produced as a curtain-raiser for the Drama Club's play. She would have to put quietly and let Paula take the credit.

It was too late to do anything now.

Kevin drove down that same evening.

He said: "How did it happen? and was angry for her and wanted to wring Paula's neck.

She could scarcely bring herself to talk of it.

High in the hills, Kevin parked the car. He reached out and drew her to him.

"You're too generous, Pippin —always. You let yourself be used."

KEVIN A VICTIM

She stole her fingers quietly to the corners of her eyes.

It's hard, isn't it, when someone you trust steps up and cuts your throat! I suppose we'll follow on a co-operative problem. In my first year of medicine! When we were finished he got the bright idea of writing a paper. Didn't say a word to me, but quietly included all my work as his own."

"It happened to you too, Kevin?" She felt warmed and comforted and near to him.

"I love it that you came to see me," she remarked.

"How much do you love it, Martha?"

"That I don't care so much about the play."

"But you were looking very lonely tonight and missing Gregg butterfly. If he had been here, you wouldn't need me."

She raised her face and looked quietly in his eyes.

"He couldn't take your place, Kevin. No one could!"

Sweets Have Place in Diet

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

"You may have a piece of candy after your nap," a young mother said to her five-year-old son in the presence of the child's grandmother. This dear lady was horrified and said that in her youth sweets were considered harmful to the health of young children.

Our attitude in the feeding of children has changed greatly in the last 25 years. With increased knowledge we know that certain foods, condemned not so long ago, are today considered health-giving foods.

Doctors who specialize in the care of children tell mothers that candy and sweets in moderation should be included in the diet of children. This change in attitude has been brought about only as a result of careful study and investigation.

Candy is sugar in a flavored and easily digested form. It is manufactured under the most hygienic methods and is subject to the rigid inspection of food and health authorities. It is accepted as a food and supplies the body with nourishing substances that are equal in food value to other substances found in less palatable form.

Candy and sweets are an immediate supply of energy, so necessary for active and growing youngsters. They use relieves fatigue and sometimes aids in bringing about a peaceful and restful sleep. This is confirmed by a recent report which states that heavy sugar eaters have fewer dreams and rest more quietly than those who refrain from eating sweets.

Of course, overeating of candy and sweets is not advised, when taken in excess, it leads to marked interference in appetite and causes digestive disturbances. It is not advisable to include in the diet, sugars, candies and other rich carbohydrate foods if you are a sufferer from acne or other similar skin disturbance.

In what I have said I do not mean to imply that candy can be substituted for other foods. But it is really a food and can well be included in the daily menu. For children who are active and energetic in their play, it is an excellent fuel substance and can be given without any hesitancy.

Do not be misled by the once popular notion that candy and sweets lead to cavities in the teeth. Cavities only occur when the teeth are neglected and infection is allowed to persist. Daily brushing of the teeth, periodic visits to the dentist, and a daily well-balanced diet that includes milk and fresh fruits and vegetables, are required to prevent dental cavities.

If everyone realized the significance and the importance of moderate amounts of candy in the diet, I am sure there would be fewer digestive disturbances. Remember that it is better to eat the foods that appeal to you than to choose only the things that are supposed to be good for you.

Flowers' New Treatment

MOST MODERN mantel-pieces are a bit bare, now, for the cabinet photographs and the whatnots have been relegated to the attic. So the mantel-piece lends itself to effective flower treatment.

It isn't proper these days to place a vase of flowers in the dead center of the mantel. A mass or a little container of flowers at either end is proper—and much more interesting. Always, with your flower arrangements, follow the lines of the room. Simple flower arrangements should prevail in the intimate rooms.

A few attractively-arranged blooms make meals happier, more harmonious occasions—as they should be. Good breakfast flowers include cut geraniums, zinnias, tulips, sweet peas, snapdragons—in short almost all garden-type flowers. Peasant pottery, so charming, informal, ideally suited for container problem.

Waldorf at the Sign of the Red Apple

Something New . . . A Delicious

PECAN ROLL

I AM INTRODUCING A WONDERFULLY delicious new roll in Waldorf restaurants today, one that always has been popular out through Ohio and nearby states, and which I long have felt would have great appeal here in New England.

● I want you to try it! After you have ordered your "special" today, in your favorite Waldorf, ask the counter clerk to add one of the new Pecan Rolls . . . and see for yourself how good it is.

● Beyond a question of a doubt it will strike your fancy . . . of that I am sure. You will like the dainty flavor of the Butterfly Roll and appreciate the wealth of Louisiana pecans that lie hidden among the folds. Sprinkled with brown sugar, in the making, there is added a caramel flavor which gives zest to the pecan taste and makes this new dessert a welcome one for luncheon, tea or supper.

● Personally I think it is particularly delicious with my coffee, after the main course of my meal. I like to unroll it, piece by piece, and see the pecan nuts as they pop into sight. It needs no butter for so much was used before it entered our great rotary ovens. It is not a hard roll, neither is it cake-like . . . In fact the new Waldorf Pecan Rolls have a style and make-up all their own, and I am sure are a delightful addition to our bill of fare.

● They are only ten cents . . . and certainly are worth it.

He admitted that the plans would probably be revived at some future date but declared the economic situation this year prevented any possibility of going ahead with the bathing beach project.

CLERGY PROTESTS DRUNKEN BOYS

This Is Life
by
ROBERT E. ROGERS

Robert E. Rogers

I had occasion the other evening to speak to a group of young women who were graduating from a secretarial school in Boston. The most noticeable thing about them as a group was that they seemed older than the average run of such groups. During the course of the evening I learned that many of them, if not the majority, had already been graduated from college.

This is only another example of how current conditions are affecting the educational field. There was a time, not so long ago, when a girl seeking a business training would go directly to "business college" instead of to high school. Then the high school, sensing competition and faithful to its American philosophy of being all things to all men—and girls, organized courses competing with the business college and proceeded to turn out hordes of graduates whose education had been almost entirely restricted to business English, bookkeeping, filing, and the necessary pot hooks and touch systems.

Meantime the girls' colleges were beginning to face the competition, and so a certain kind of school began offering the B. S. degree for what was essentially the old business college training with a some cultural protective coloration.

Now, in the depression, the graduates of our girls' colleges find themselves at a loss. Many daughters of formerly well-to-do families face the need of earning a living. Teaching more and more sets the requirement of graduate study in professional training, with an ever increasing surplus of teachers and no visible increase in jobs. Business beckons to the girl with an A. B. But that, too, involves specialized training, at least, something more than the old curriculum, a copy-cat of the men's college curriculum of the past. Hence they turn to the strictly professional schools, which aim their catalogues at mature girls of some intellectual background—so far as a degree can show it—who are supposedly capable of being secretaries and minor executives instead of mere office girls.

To some extent the same is true of the girl behind the counter. Last summer, during the Costello trial, a reporter on a Boston morning newspaper wrote a story in which he said that Mrs. Costello's voice and diction was that of a shop girl. Almost immediately I received a wrathy letter from a "shop girl" asking me to take up the cudgels. As a matter of professional courtesy I couldn't very well do that, but I enjoyed the letter vividly. The writer's point was that the majority of her shop girl friends were college graduates, well read, often in several languages and quite the equal of the school teaching or professional class of woman.

I'd like to add, on my own account as a shopper, that the type of college saleswoman that is making her way into the department stores is frequently inferior to the grammar school graduate who made her way into the business on a superior position and who knows things about sales psychology the average college girl never takes the trouble to learn. But that is a parenthesis.

Assuming that the majority of these girls in business look upon it as a stop-gap until the right man comes along, yet there are increasing numbers of those who must stay in the business or who have the professional spirit and want to do something important. For these I have two recent books to recommend. To the first Elsie Robinson devoted two articles only last week, which would prove that she found it a potent source of inspiration. It is entitled "If You Want to Get Ahead," (Little Brown Co.), by Ray W. Sherman, a well known publishing executive and a rather-hard-boiled and practical person. His advice is directed to men largely but it is equally applicable to women on the subject. It boils down pretty much to beginning a job which your intelligence tells you should be attacked and then finishing it. A little illustrative sermon on the will and the part it plays in success.

The other is called "Careers for Women," a new edition of well known book, written by Catherine Filene and published by Houghton Mifflin Co. It contains 160 articles, each written by a woman successful in her field, and covering all the occupations which women are pursuing successfully today. A few of them are unique jobs, such as deep sea diving, bridal counselling, being a lady mayor, etc., but the majority are common enough occupations for women. The emphasis on highly specialised work, particularly in the sciences and for the government, shows that women are making places for themselves in all kinds of interesting and well paid occupations which were unheard of a score of years ago. For an ambitious girl who wants suggestions it is well worth the $3 it costs.

One thing in Sherman's book "If You Want to Get Ahead" I like. He stresses the importance of loyalty of the woman to her boss and the important part she may play in the success of the business. If as I suspect, the liberal arts women's college tends to emphasize the girl's right to be an individual and subordinate marriage to a career, and perhaps even her superiority to the average male, then the business-trained girl may be getting wiser and more realistic training for her future life than the much-criticized "college girl." There are many who think she deserves a new deal in education.

PUPILS GIVEN WARNING TO AVOID 'REDS'

Supt. Campbell Moves to Block May 1 Demonstration

New evidence of widespread Red propaganda in Boston public schools was promised today by state and federal investigators, as authorities moved to block participation of school pupils in May 1 demonstrations planned by Communist organizations here.

Informed that circulars have been distributed asking boys and girls of public schools to join in the Red parade, May 1, Supt. of Schools Patrick J. Campbell issued orders today that absences of pupils from classes next Tuesday must be carefully checked by teachers.

Children will be warned, he said, that they must not stay out of school except on account of illness or emergency, attested by notes signed by their parents

GIRL, BOY OPERATORS

The action of Supt. Campbell followed alleged discovery by federal agents that this year's "Red" May Day program here is to be featured, its organizers hope, not only by appearance of hundreds of public school pupils in the ranks of Communist marchers, but also by speechmaking on Boston Common by at least one representative of the boy and girl converts to the "Cause."

The printed invitations to school children, it was declared, urged them to take part "with representative bodies from Harvard and Technology" in the May 1 demonstration

U. S. FINDINGS SOON

Determination of Boston authorities to prevent recruiting of public school pupils for next Tuesday's parade was affirmed today by police reports calling attention to disorders attendant upon similar occasions in other years.

At the same time, a special agent of the U. S. Department of Justice, assigned here to check up on activities of Communist propaganda in the schools, was today preparing a special report to be made tomorrow before a legislative committee.

The committee has before it a bill offered by Rep. Philip S. Bowker of Brookline, calling for an inquiry by the State Department of Education into recent school "strikes" in Everett and other cities. These and moves to dismiss certain teachers have been inspired and supported, it is claimed, by groups affiliated with 'Red' organizations

Catholic Uniform Banned in Munich

Munich, Germany, April 24 (INS)—The police of Munich, birthplace of the National Socialist movement, today placed a ban upon the uniforms and emblems of all Catholic youth organizations, adding one more chapter to the feud between the Catholic church and Bavarian authorities.

Penalties for violation of the ruling range up to six weeks' imprisonment and a fine of 150 marks (about $60).

HANFSTAENGL DENIES NAZI AID CHARGE

Surprised at Critics of Harvard Reunion; Refuses Post

Ernst Hanfstaengl, the high Hitler official whose appointment as an aide to the alumni marshal of the Harvard commencement group has set a tempest, is "flabbergasted" by the appointment and the criticism it invoked, according to Associated Press dispatches from Berlin today.

It is true he has resigned the post, he said, but not because of criticism.

Being chief of the Nazi foreign press bureau, he probably won't be able to attend the commencement and officiate.

Graduated from Harvard in 1909, he was a crewman and brilliant scholar.

RETURNS ATTACK

Criticism of the appointment of the Harvard-bred German was based on the contention Hitlerism was a negation of all American principles of freedom, Hanfstaengl contended

Fighting back, he said:

"To find myself in the midst of a heated Harvard controversy, which extends even to congressional circles is the more surprising as Harvard scored one time memorial has stood for freedom of opinion."

Reading a clipping from an American newspaper in which he was represented as attending a party in celebration of the sinking of the Lusitania in 1915, Hanfstaengl recalled tragic events in his own life which occurred at the same time.

"At the very time the news that the Lusitania had been torpedoed reached New York," he said, "I also received word that my favorite brother had been killed fighting for his country on the western front.

MOTHER WAS AMERICAN

"To break this terrible news of the loss of another son to our old widowed mother, herself the daughter of an American general, took me not days, but weeks, before I felt the news would not mean her certain collapse.

"As for propaganda, I never made propaganda and never shall. A Harvard reunion means a possible vacation for me, not work."

DOUBLE SUICIDE PUZZLES KIN

Unable to ascribe any reason for the double suicide of Harris Woodbury, 24 year old engraver and his bride of a few hours, Olive Bishop Woodbury, parents of the young couple had the bodies removed to Gloucester to-day.

While funeral arrangements have not yet been completed it is likely the young bridal pair who ended their lives in a South End rooming house, will be buried with a double funeral service and their bodies will rest side by side in the same grave

Mrs. Elizabeth Arthur Woodbury, overcome with grief, was unable to ascribe any motive for the double tragedy.

"My son and his sweetheart were perfectly normal and happy when they left Gloucester last Wednesday night to be married" she told the Boston Evening American.

"There was not the slightest objection from any source to the marriage. If only we could understand why they killed themselves we would feel easier."

Hero on His Bed of Pain

Serious burns were suffered by William Murray, 15, of North Reading, early today, when he attempted vainly to rescue his brother, Nelson, 11, during a fire which destroyed their father's cottage. He is now shown in Whidden Memorial Hospital, Everett. (Picture by Boston Evening American Staff Photographer.)

All of the pianists have been winners of the Conservatory-Mason and Hamlin competition

Her last surviving member James M Lewis, 83, of Paris st, East Boston, was buried in Holy Cross cemetery yesterday. He had lived to see "Old Ironsides" restored to seaworthiness after nearly half a century, but he missed her return by a few days She is expected here about May 1

JAMAICA PLAIN LICENSE IS OPPOSED

Fr. Flynn, Rev. Chandler Cite Youths of '15 Under Influence

Charges that boys only 15 years old reel out of taverns and other liquor dispensaries in Jamaica Plain and that the young men and women of the district have been infected by the liquor evil were made today before the licensing board by a Catholic priest and a Congregational minister

The allegations of drunken boys and liquor-infected youth were made by the Rev. Maurice J. Flynn of St. Thomas Church, and by Rev Edgar H. Chandler, of the Central Congregational Church, both of whom appeared to opposed the granting of a liquor license to Frank W Roberts, of 671 Center st Jamaica Plain.

Roberts, operator of a restaurant in Center st., plans to remodel his establishment so that it can be operated as a dine and dance type. His petition drew the largest crowd of persons objecting to the granting of the permit since two weeks following the granting of liquor licenses.

BOYS BET LIQUOR

In voicing his opposition, Rev Maurice J. Flynn said

"I am opposed to this petition because boys under 21 years old are able to go into package goods stores and procure liquor.

"Boys 15 years old go into restaurants selling liquor and sit for hours over a sandwich and drink numerous glasses of beer and then come reeling out of the places drunk.

"I am not opposed to liquor as a business until it is conducted in a fashion that is harmful. I say that the liquor business has reached the point where it has become harmful to the people of Jamaica Plain"

ROBERTS IS PRAISED

Rev. Edgar H S Chandler said:

"Some of the finest young people in Jamaica Plain have become infected with the liquor evil. That is the place where hard liquor is sold that can be conducted properly

All of those who favored opposition to Roberts petition admitted they had never heard anything detrimental to the character of Roberts or any connected as to the manner in which Roberts operated his restaurant business.

New York, April 24—Libby Holman's plans for a stage come-back, her friends say, include a definite try at more serious dray-mah than the sinuous moanin' low in dim lights that characterized her career before the crack-up. She is studying earnestly at her country place near New York.

The young Cincinnati matron's chief asset was the tragic husk to her sullen voice. In new flowering she wants to abandon that and register in higher key. So she is not only pursuing drama-turgy in its more sedate branches, but voice culture as well.

When she comes to town, chiefly to see plays, she arrives in her private plane, being an enthusiastic aviatrix, although she has not yet flown alone. At the theater she usually occupies a seat on the aisle far back. And, while she pops out for a cigarette at intermission, does not mingle with the lobby crowd.

Several local producers have [illegible] but chiefly for revues, a type of enter [illegible] she is anxious to avoid in her return to [illegible] lights. It is believed that after an extensive period of study, she will go to London for her debut. Noel Coward may clear the way.

Miss Holman's worthy effort may be an exception. But it is a truism of the Rialto that most of the blossoming favor of those caught in the notoriety of the courtroom wilts with the headlines. Psychologists explain it by declaring that no matter how well they act, audience reactions is diverted by speculative curiosity.

James Whittaker is regarded an ace re-write man in the editorial shops of New York and native Chicago. A rolling stone, he rarely remains in one spot long, but wherever he will hand his bat a top salary job is waiting. It was Whittaker who, before his homemoon had ended with his then wife, Ina Claire, was cast to review a play in which she opened on Broadway. His critique was a classic in genteel excoriation. Few knew, however, his real forte is music He makes arrangements of classic suites for double piano and such and is himself a pianist of concert calibre But he spurns engagements because he will have to wear full evening dress.

At luncheon the other day I sat a seat removed from one of the professional baby vamps of the amusement world, a downy creature of cloudy sweetness. Her coquetting charms are encompassed largely in a birdy voice, a sort of chirp. Plus, of course, large marvelous eyes demurely cast down. We fell to talking books and I wondered what a baby vamp read in relaxing moments. I rather expected she would be fond of D. H. Lawrence and Havelock Ellis. Instead she professed to be excited by stories of the sea with special devotion to Melville's "Moby Dick" and Conrad's "Mars Nostrum."

I have always believed there is a snobbish lack of naturalness and frankness in discussing one's literary tastes in public. It so happens that mostly because of the exquisite phrasing (much of the plot and real meaning escape me), I like Shakespeare. But I also like E. Phillips Oppenheim and have read every story he ever published. Yet when bookish topics come up I veer to Shakespeare and well what knowledge have of him and his work, with copious quotations. Somehow, and it strikes me as rather snide, I do not mention Oppenheim at all.

There is a tug toward bird feeders in Central Park. Neither wind, snow or rain keeps them from their daily tryst. In some 20 years I have come to know eight, two, incidentally, are elderly white mustached twins. Some pay their visits in the morning, but the majority at sundown. They have their favorite benches and the sparrows, pigeons and squirrels reveal their instincts for awareness by peeping about nearer as a half hour before the various arrivals. One has a feeling regulars among the bird-feeders are miffed off anyone sits on the Manhattan niches in painful isolation. There is invariably a lonely look in their eyes

I popped into a lah-de-dah avenue nic nac show today to look at bill folds—imagine me or anyone having a bill to fold; My inferiority sends me into such places with an awkward assumption of nonchalance. "Something in bill folds," I murmured, plucking a bit of imaginary fluff from my sleeve. They were shown in lizard, ostrich, seal and alligator with gold and platinum edgings from $35 to $105. Cut-out monogram $10 extra. Finally I blurted: "Mister, you know what?" He looked puzzled. So I finished: I'm just a snap purse man at heart"—and went into my shreddidle

CORPORATIONS SUFFER FROM BIG COSTS

Profits Are Small in Comparison With Gain in Sales

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

Profits of some corporations are suffering from competition with costs. Witness the report of Generes Foods for the three months ended March 31. President C. M. Chester says sales in certain lots for the three months showed an improvement of 28 per cent over the first quarter of last year. But, he adds, earnings did not increase proportionately because of higher raw material costs, increased manufacturing costs and higher taxes took away a good part of the increased gross revenue. If the greater movement of goods by the company had not been forced to compete with the increased costs it is likely the showing of 70 cents per share for the initial quarter would have been bettered.

C. M. Chester

Another factor in commodity stories is prices, increased manufacturing costs and higher taxes took away a good part of the increased gross revenue. If the greater movement of goods by the company had not been forced to compete with the increased costs it is likely the showing of 70 cents per share for the initial quarter would have been bettered.

Amortization of every mortgage by the savings bank making the loan is advocated in the columns of the current issue of the United States Investor. It is recalled that the head of a large Boston savings bank once remarked that a real estate mortgage is a loan not meant to be paid. The wisdom of thus reducing a loan on property has always been open to question, since there has never been any doubt that property as a whole tends to depreciate over the years. Consequently we cast our vote for amortization.

While the boys around the boardroom are bemoaning the poor tape action of Auburn, reports from company headquarters are encouraged by chortle. Crane's Automotive Reports says Auburn has more unfilled orders in the export department than the company shipped in the entire year 1933. Then domestic business is expanding at a good pace, which might be faster but for low state of dealer stocks. Demands for Auburns is strong and only needs cars to be translated into sales.

Early week hesitancy of share prices did not cause any concern in bull circles. On dips volume tended to dry up and prices measured by the popular average, inclined to move in a restricted range. For our part we are decidedly in favor of remaining on the job. A nearby thrust into new high ground is awaited. The industrial picture, for instance, could travel up to the 110-112 area without overdoing the bullish aspects of the market situation.

New York, April 24 (AP)—The New York silver market was weak today, the metal dropping a full cent to 43¾ cents an ounce and fractures losing a cent or more.

Brokers attributed the selling to reported indications that additional silver legislation could not be enacted at the present session of Congress, although simultaneously Washington dispatches said members of the Senate silver bloc had predicted favorable action on a bill authorizing the purchase of a billion ounces for monetary purposes.

INDUSTRY SEEN AS POINTING UPWARD

Demand Is Limited by the Higher Prices, Says Haney

By LEWIS HANEY

Professor of Economics, New York University

New York, April 24 Last week saw relatively little change in industrial activity. Such change as there was, pointed up, but, on the whole one got the impression that the spring line has mowed up and may be nearing peak

As for from stimulants here at it there, such as announcements of price mark-ups, anticipation of labor difficulties cold weather and government doles, there is little evidence of general buoyance. Supplies are generally ample. Demand is limited by high costs and prices in important cases

The latest figures show a further increase in steel production. They do not, however, appear to be the result of buying stimulated by artificial price manipulation.

The steel producers under their code have jacked up their prices, but have not been driven to order in advance. Then they will buy . . . The government's financing of railways for rail buying is all out to expire, so there has been little rues to order rails

It is not surprising to find the case of industrial activity tailing off a little since the beginning of March. The rise between November 1933 and March, this year, was quite sharp and extensive. I think that was too largely based on government spending and "pump priming" to be self-sustaining. Now for six weeks the general level of industry has shown little net change, after making allowance for seasonal factors

It may seem strange that commodity price averages held up last week, for the fact seems to be that the markups by the steel producers and government buying of steel about offset the declines in grain and cotton

No better illustration could be found of the folly of chasing about stabilized prices on the basis of price averages. According to the index of producers' prices, retail prices remain stable But what about the wheat farmer?

The administration has continued to show more conservative tendencies, at least in the matter of silver inflation labor and NRA policies. Evidently the hope is that by soft pedaling radicalism, and drawing conflicted bank credit for spending and doles, business men will be induced to take hold

I fear it will take much more definite monetary policies, and the abandonment of economic principles based on experience rather than flighty expediency, to establish that confidence which capital and enterprise require

"L" TRAFFIC IS 7.9 P. C. HIGHER IN QUARTER

76,952,722 Revenue Fare Passengers Are Carried

Boston Elevated Railway Co. experienced a substantial pick-up in revenue fare passengers during the March quarter, reflecting the severe winter, which kept many private automobiles off the streets, and general improvement in business.

The road transported 76,952,722 revenue fare passengers in the quarter, against 71,282,552 a year ago, an increase of 5,670,170 or 7.9 per cent. This was also the best showing for any quarterly period since March, 1932, when 83,465,134 persons used the company's facilities.

In the intervening period number of passengers carried by quarters since March, 1932, compares as follows:

March	76,952,722
Dec.	70,545,472
Sept.	58,614,113
June	67,494,292

71,282,552	a year ago
72,107,050
74,617,091

For the March, 1934, quarter the "El" reports a net profit of $115,532 after cost of service, including dividends against a deficit of $315,683 a year ago, and a deficit of $147,238 in 1932. This past quarter is the first since March, 1930, that a profit has been returned for the initial three months' period, the 1930 net income having been $362,203.

Capital Working for Cheap Rate in High Grade Bonds

By Associated Press

New York, April 24—Capital invested in high grade corporate bonds, according to current market levels, is working for the cheapest rates since 1902.

The average yield on 30 high grade bonds, as computed by Moody's, has fallen to 4.03 per cent from 4.43 per cent in January and 5.75 per cent two years ago. Not in 23 years, Moody's records show have triple-A corporate issues sold at prices to yield so little.

The extraordinarily high prices commanded by these gilt-edged obligations are attributed in Wall st., first, to the administration's credit expansion policy as exemplified in the huge excess reserves of the banks, and secondly, to an actual physical scarcity of bonds as a result of the virtual cessation of new issuing during the past year.

Important investment quarters see in the strong leaning toward "sound money" in administration quarters recently a determination to force expansion of credit through the investment market and the banks. The administration is believed in these quarters to be determined to prevent any monetary uncertainty which might impair the gilt-edged bond market.

Stimulation of the new issue business through revision of the securities act, which is being widely discussed in Washington, might tend to check the rise in the bond market, since actual physical scarcity of bonds has undoubtedly been the chief factor in the continued rise of late.

Continuance of the exceptionally low yield basis of high grade investment bonds, it is explained, should enable credit expansion to industry, since banks, unable to get an attractive return on their funds in the investment market, may be expected to look more eagerly for good commercial borrowers.

STOCK TONE IS FIRM AT CLOSE OF MARKET

New York, April 24—Pronounced weakness in commodities brought a momentary tone to the stock market today in which losses running to more than 3 points were suffered in leading issues. The list rose however, was firm.

Support appeared in the last hour and the list firmed up. General Motors was the centre of the late buying and the stock pushed ahead for a gain on the day on reports that an extra dividend would be paid at the May 1 meeting.

Silver was the weakest of commodities, falling more than 2 cents an ounce. The treasury's decision to publish the list of silver "hoarders" led to general unloading. Wheat tumbled 4 cents a bushel and cotton $1.25 a bale, both rallying later. Bonds were mixed and the dollar firm.

The biggest losses were in the steel shares, with U. S. Smelting tumbling more than 3 points. Oils were heavily sold, particularly the Rockefeller-dominated companies. One block in Socony Vacuum was 10,100 shares and one transaction in Standard of New Jersey totaled a new low for the year and 3 points. Standard of Indiana equalled its low.

Motors were heavy, with Auburn hitting a new low but rallying with General Motors. Steels were heavy despite the jump in the industry's operations, awaiting the outcome of the U. S. Steel directors' meeting after the close.

Rails were steadier by hope that the new Washington conferences would bring a settlement of the rail wage deadlock.

Stocks were irregular in the first hour with changes confined to a narrow range. Auburn, Motor, Beech-Nut Packing, Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit, Columbian Carbon, Hercules Powder and U. S. Smelting were down a point or more. American Can, U. S. Steel, International Harvester, McIntyre Porcupine, National Steel and Noranda were at moderately lower levels.

Air Reduction, A. P. W. Paper and Standard Gas showed gains of a point. Devoe & Reynolds advanced 2 points. Continental, selling ex-dividend, was a point higher. Twin City Rapid Transit was 2 points above its last closing price.

Sales to 11 a. m. approximated 200,000 shares.

Pronounced weakness was a special feature during the second hour. Liquidation selling occurred in some of the oil shares. International Nickel was also heavy.

Allied Chemical, du Pont, United Aircraft, Timken Roller, Standard Oil of New Jersey and Nickel Plate were at fractionally improved levels.

Sales to noon approximated 550,000 shares.

Third hour prices were but little changes from the previous two hours. Losses in leading issues were extended to more than a point. General Motors was down over a point. International Harvester, with Devoe & Reynolds soaring almost 4 points, while National Dairying showed a gain of over 2 points.

Twin City Rapid Transit issues were strong with the common gaining over a point while the preferred soared more than 6 points. Royal Dutch was down over a point.

Sales to 1 p. m. approximated 720,000 shares.

Fourth hour prices were inclined to sag. Columbian Carbon was down over 2 points. Pere Marquette dropped over 2 points. Gains in Twin City issues were pared. Woolworth showed a loss of a point. American Safety Razor was higher than a point higher.

Atchison, Anchor Cap, Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit, Columbian Carbon, Cerro De Pasco were down a point or more. Chrysler, Eastman Kodak, Liquid Carbonic and Safeway Stores were down a point or more.

Sales to 2 p. m. approximated 930,000 shares.

WARNERS PLAN FILM BASED ON CHARLES DICKENS' "PICKWICK PAPERS"

Lights and Shadows

By George Holland

Sometimes you can't believe actors, particularly when they are speaking through their public relations' counsel, but right hand I tell an interesting statement from Bradley Cass, who plays the scrappy young Wall Street broker in "No More Ladies" at the Boston-New York comedy hit, which you remember all about the Plymouth with Evelyn Watson. Mr. Cass declares that one selection of Harvard men is responsible for his characterization.

Lucille Watson

The actor says that he found employment in the Harvard Club as a menial and observed the members for several days and nights. Unaccustomed to the dialect spoken at the club, he had hired a Lancastershire roof thatcher as interpreter and after he understood what the thatcher was talking about, he and (and all three are direct quotes), he made rapid progress in his investigation of the Harvard soul.

"Three hours each day he stood before a mirror with a lamp of ice on his head to get the accurate amount of indifference for the role. The first night Club Mr. Cass says, he owes the thanks of playgoers for its responsible for a reality of authenticity in "No More Ladies." Mr. Cass, by the way, is a Yale man.

I don't know whether I should mention this but the wires have been burning, to the saving goes, between here and New York and Hollywood. Charles W. Koerner, commandant of the RKO battlements in this territory, was so dissatisfied with the picture "Glamour" at RKO Keith's Theater that he cabled the studio that is exerted the engagement and moved up the premiere date of "Cleopatra" or "Becky Sharp" or "The Great" so that Elizabeth Bergner's film will open tomorrow morning, and "Glamour" which was booked to play until Friday will close. Protest against the Koerner action began in New York and waved over the cephyr way to Hollywood I hear. The charge that the picture was insufficiently talked was the opening.

Charles W. Koerner

Mr. Koerner fell back on the old premise of show-business—that preseasonity gets an opening audience and that the attraction stands on its own thereafter. And he concluded with his opinion that the public can't be fooled in large enough gobs to make it profitable

The closing of the Howard was predicted here ten days ago. The South End Theater mentioned in the same listing was the Columbia. It will cease to be a Loew's unit.

Potter's Field, which closed Saturday night at the Plymouth, is being rehearsed in Boston, with Author Paul Green still present and making excuses to his prospective employers in Hollywood. Mrs. Margaret Hewes, producer, plans on taking her cast and production to New York for a preview two weeks hence. She will then work on her program for the Wharf Playhouse, Provincetown, which that year will be composed largely of new plays.

Special Feature

Tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock, another in the series of language classes will be held at the Fine Arts Theater. With the delightful childhood fantasy, "Emil und die Detektive," as the feature picture, the lesson will be in German once more.

Guy Kibbee as Mr. Pickwick in Screen Version of Famous Author's Literary Gem

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

Los Angeles, April 24—Didn't I say a few days ago that Hollywood has gone completely Dickens. Warner Brothers is the latest film company to get on the band wagon and join the parade. "Pickwith Papers," one of the lightest of Charles Dickens' novels and one of the most amusing will be produced by Warners with all the trimmings.

Who do you think will play Mr. Pickwick? Guy Kibbee, the round, cherubic comedian has been nominated for the role by Jack Warner, the Kibbee ought to be a natural. The rest of the cast will be selected later as will the director.

Lucille Watson

The Pickwick story is sure they pack some very special parts in little Shirley Temple Who's Who—Louella O. Parsons on Stand Up and Cheer was shown at the Radio City Theater in New York the influence did just for the Shirley—see New York by storm—so to speak. And Warner Bros. have written a role in the part in her next picture "Baby Take a Bow," which Philip Klein has written for her. Jack Haley, Lionel Barrymore and Jimmy Dunn will be in the cast for the picture. And another actress will sing a song.

A Line or Two

One of the brightest girls in Hollywood is Ruth Cummings. She was a niece of L. B. Mayer but spite of the difficulties of having a famous relative she has gone ahead. Her first role "Song of the Flesh" was accepted by McCauley and Company and this last week she had an article in one of the magazine which was extremely interesting. London is going crazy Farrell for a star with a grand salary and I am afraid he's listening. Cummings is almost persuaded to remain in Hollywood to play the role in Music in the Air opp. Peggy Woods that he played on the stage.

Snapshots of Hollywood

ROBERT LEONARD should have won the prize at the HARDOLD LLOYD party in his smock and tam o'shanter; he was the prettiest but not the happiest. GERTRUDE LEONARD ordered his costume, a huge smock with flowing tie and a cute little tam o'shanter; a friend of his wife swiped the tam early in the evening and offered her own hat as a substitute. HAROLD LLOYD, who is studying art, believe it or not, had the surprise party in the canteen which was hung with original drawings; MAL ST CLAIR contributed to the gallery by drawing pictures of all the guests the two little LLOYD girls, GLORIA and PEGGY, were allowed to stay up late until their father made his appearance. JOBY WING forgetting about MAURICE CHEVALIER, IRENE in the smiles of CARL LAEMMLE JR. they were dancing, LUPE VELEZ and ADRIENNE AMES, looking just too crazy punching together, RITA KAUFMAN, hostess at a house warming, MARY CARLL NEHLAN and the girl friend, MRS. LOUISE CELESTIN making the guests welcome, the outstanding the stooges of the JOHNSON stooges LES WHEELER and WOOLSEY GEORGE SIDNEY, BEN VERNIE JACK OAKIE among those who did honor to the Hollywood stooges; ALICE FAYE in a cradle sent without either LYLE TALBOT or DANNY DANKER; LYLE who was decorated at one time, to WYNNE GIBSON who has been playing her scenes. That's all today. See you tomorrow!

Jack Greenman and Sid Fields together, with the comedy duo of Dalwood and Fay, were favorites with the opening afternoon audience and breezed through the show with one laugh following another.

Keith Picture Brings Bright New Star

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

Fans meet Elizabeth Bergner' Miss Bergner (in shadow), meet the Boston film lover! There, now—that's the introduction, and you may all see the great lady at last. For her cinematic self is already in town—and she goes on (her first here) public view at RKO B. F. Keith's tomorrow. Very wisely the management decided to set the premiere ahead to Wednesday instead of the originally planned Friday event.

Much has been written about Miss Bergner since the fine film, "Catherine the Great," introduced her to English-speaking audiences. You may like to know that book of this production was Alexander Korda once a deft director of Hollywood movies, and now in England. He is the gentleman who sent over "The Private Life of Henry VIII," one of the grandest of all sound screen comedies. The actual director of the new picture, coming to Keith's is Paul Czinner, husband of Miss Bergner, and an ace in his profession.

To get us all better acquainted with Miss Bergner, hailed as the brightest new comer to screen since Helen Hayes, let's have a few facts about her.

Born in Vienna . . . on stage early in life, winning fame later in Shakespeare then Shaw's "St. Joan" then "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney" and O'Neill's "Strange Interlude." Entered films as a character actress, her first role being that of a villainess. She is said to have found herself so hateful at the preview showing that she rushed from the projection room, exclaiming: "Never again!"

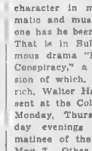
Finally sickness and necessity of paying bills forced her to go back into pictures. Next was with Emil Jannings . . . more pictures followed . . . then with her husband, a refugee from his native land, to London . . . where she is now appearing on stage as star of "Escape Me Never." . . . expects to appear in same play next fall on this side, and is expected at Hollywood later.

'Richelieu' for Hampden at Colonial

By HARRIS MORGAN

Cardinal Richelieu has been a character in many plays, dramatic and musical, but in only one has he been the protagonist. That is in Bulwer Lytton's famous drama "Richelieu, or the Conspiracy," a modernized version of which, by Arthur Goodrich, Walter Hampden will present at the Colonial Theater on Monday, Thursday and Saturday evenings and Wednesday matinee of the week beginning May 7. Other presentations of the week will be "The Servant in the House" on Tuesday and Friday evenings, "Hamlet" on Wednesday evening and "Macbeth" Saturday afternoon.

Richelieu, being the most powerful and also the most feared and hated man not only in France but in all Europe during the first half of the 17th century, many were the intrigues in which he was implicated, generally as the central figure, and many the dramatic and romantic episodes to which he was party either as a principal or influence in the background.



Walter Hampden

So it is in Bulwer's play, Richelieu therein being the determining factor in a conspiracy in which his own life is at stake and also the throne of Louis XIII to say nothing of the lives and happiness of Julie de Mortemar and her lover, Adrien de Mauprat. In the play Richelieu, so aptly described as a combination of the Lion and the Fox, saves not only his own life and preserves his authority as prime minister of France, but thwarts the intrigue by which Gaston, Duke of Orleans, brother of Louis XIII expected to seize the throne.

Richelieu was the deus ex machina in Stanley J. Weyman's romance, "Under the Red Robe," which found its way to the dramatic stage with William Faversham as star and to musical comedy with Walter Woolf in the lead, they however playing the hero, Gil de Berault, and not Cardinal. Likewise in Alexander Dumas' "Three Musketeers," as novel, drama, operetta and cinema, Richelieu is an important personage.

Waldron's Casino

McKechnie Promotes Frankhouse to Top of Pitching Class ↑ Freddy, the Problem Child, Starts Braves' Homecoming Contest ↓

By AUSTEN LAKE

According to his shrewd custom, Headmaster Willie McKechnie did not tell Fred Frankhouse that he was to pitch the home-coming game for the Braves this afternoon, so that Fred read the news in the morning papers. By longtime experience McKechnie knew that the young man is prone to nibble his cuffs and work into a nervous flusher if apprised of his assignment too far in advance. And so as the Braves, very stylish in their new white woolens, clattered through the underground tunnel, just before practice time, Bill said, absent mindedly, "O, I think you might as well work, Fred."

Austen Lake

This business of handling pitchers, with their many sided personalities, is the No. 1 job of a major league manager. He must study the whims and temperaments of his men as a lion tamer learns the traits of his savage pupils. Bill knows that Frankhouse has a "fast pulse," a sensitive imagination and a fidgety mind, just as 'Huck Betts is stolid, phlegmatic and known to the trade as "Mr. Icewater." And Bill knows that Ed Brandt is moody and a somber type with a chip on his shoulder and a belligerent love for a tight spot, while Ben Cantwell is a warm weather pitcher, who never perspires on the hottest days, and whose tropic breeding never thrives in New England's frigid spring.

Frankhouse's Vice Was Hard Work

To Frankhouse, who was something of a problem child during his early years with the Braves, today's assignment is a form of graduation from the delinquent class into the first rank of Braves' pitchers. When Fred first came to Boston from the Cardinals in 1930 with Willie Sherdel in exchange for Burleigh Grimes, he was a hard working lad, given to putting his soul into every pitch.

He had not learned the trick of coasting and sharing his burden with the eight fielders at his back, and, time and again, he would break out suddenly in the heaves, with giddy periods when he blinged the ball wide of the plate, so that McKechnie would summon him out of there, and sadly send him to the showers. And each spring Bill would become optimistic all over again and say, "Maybe Freddy will ripen this year," only at the end of the season, have to confess, "No, this was not his year."

Schoolboy copy book exercises teach that hard work conquers everything, or, as the penmanship exercise goes, "Labor Omnia vincit." But here was a case of a man defeating his own ends by striving too hard to accomplish the thing he could have mastered by idling down. The fire of his ambition burned out his fuse, and he was just a run of the mill thrower, despite having all the raw material that makes greatness.

Lefty Grove suffered from this same fault during his early years with the Athletics, knocking himself out of the box with bases on balls until Connie Mack's fatherly counsel taught him the folly of trying to strike out every batter who came to the plate. And Bill, with Freddy, like Connie had with Lefty, kept repeating patiently "Don't show everything till you need it," knowing that many pitchers, win games with schoolboy lobs that have nothing on the ball but a kiss and a promise, yet by the grace of good fortune are knocked within hand reach of their fielders.

The Outstanding Curve Thrower of the League

There are older pitchers like Herb Pennock of the Red Sox who stand on the mound and whittle away with creampuff pitches that never come up in the same spot, catching the batters between strides or where they are least apt to get the fat of their bats against the ball. And though Herb's youthful fury has long since departed, his cunning and control still survive.

There were several times during the last four years when the Braves, needing infield material, could have traded Frankhouse, and once or twice the temptation to cash in on Freddy's promise caused McKechnie to gnaw his nails and say, "Now I wonder." But always his natural Scotch gift for resistance came uppermost, and he clung to his simple faith that the lad would some day pay him for his patience.

No other pitcher in the National League uses so many curve balls in a game as does Frankhouse, and few pitchers have a more sweeping bend or a better variety of "breaks." Sometimes indeed, Fred's curve will start to sweep while still halfway to the plate and swerve as much as four feet out of line. These curves vary, from little wrinkles to big roundhouse hooks, depending on the amount of spin Fred puts on the ball.

That is why Frankhouse's problem of control has been a more delicate one than was Grove's. For Lefty was essentially a fast ball pitcher with virtually no curve in his kit and who merely had to study direct marksmanship like an army sniper learns to nick off his target. Lefty's curve was only a decoy at best and served up to add to a batter's uneasiness.

In the time and with the energy that it has taken to learn to nick the corners of the plate and throw to pitching spots, Frankhouse might have become a competent surgeon, a successful architect or a trial lawyer. Which may prove that his profession, or as Burleigh Grimes used to call it "hid art," is longer and more exacting than any of these.

LEFTY GROVE — GORDON HINKLE — UMPIRE TOM KEADY — JOE CUSICK

Griffith Stadium Washington April 24 Headed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt, the official life of the Capitol turned out today to welcome baseball to Washington.

The Senators opened their home season against the Sox this afternoon and the President placed the stamp of authority to the game by tossing out the first ball.

The weather was ideal for an opening.

Wally Stewart for the Senators and Johnny Welch for the Hose were the rival hoxmen

HIS SECOND EFFORT

Although the country at large was led to believe that the President's recent 10-day sojourn in the South was for the purpose of catching rare specimens of tropical fish, in reality the trip was arranged in offer him an opportunity to get his arm in shape to toss out the first ball at today's inaugural Annually, the president of the United States lends grandeur and dignity to the opening games here by his presence. Then he leaves himself open to be charged with the first wild pitch of the season through lack of preparation to carry out his assignment.

GROVE LICKS H C

The Red Sox were in a jovial mood when they slipped off the Federal Express at the Union Station early this morning, for Lefty "Lefty" Grove had passed muster on his first test on the mound.

"Lefty" worked five innings against Holy Cross and, although he did not let out the coilsprings were able to corral only four hits, one of which, however, was a home run by Ed Moriarty.

Now that Grove is rounding into shape, the Red Sox will be a tough club to lick.

Johnny Welch will be on the mound for the Red Sox this afternoon opposing Walter Stewart, a southpaw, who formerly labored for the St. Louis Browns . . . Welch held the Senators the holiday afternoon at New Fenway Park to five hits, three of which came in the third inning, and romped home an easy winner, 7 to 3. Wally Stewart weathered six innings against the Sox in the morning game last Thursday, during which he was socked for four runs and eight hits

COOL TO LOSER

Due to the fact that the Senators are only breaking even with the Red Sox in Boston, lost two out of three to the Athletics in Philadelphia, it will not be surprising if the American League champions do not get a rousing reception this afternoon. The fans here take their ball "straight" and have been never known to condole any loosing club

Grove's Form Raises Sox Hopes

Lefty Grove will start his first game for the Red Sox late this week or early next week. With no pain and no after-effects from his five innings of work against Holy Cross, the Sox chieftains have reached the conclusion that Grove's arm is ready and that their $150,000 investment in getting him from the Athletics was by no means $1 ,000 booted away.

Grove pitched five full innings against the Crusaders who got four hits and one base on balls. Grove fanned four and hit one batter with a pitched ball. At that he wasn't bearing down. There was a cold wind sweeping across Fitton Field where 4000 looked on, and Grove wisely decided it was no day to cut loose.

However, the temptation was too great in the fifth when, with two on, he bore down for a spell and fanned Britt on three pitched balls and then forced Moriarty, who had secured a homer from his delivery, to tap weakly back to him

Grove threw three of his f d fire balls in the games against the Crusaders who are by no means ignorant in the knowledge of hitting and were up there to make Grove look bad if they could. All three had their old effectiveness

George Pipgras, another crippled Sox hurler, pitched the last four innings. Unlike Grove, he didn't look so good." Pipgras gave eight hits to the Purple clouters. It will be at least another month before the big right-hander obtained from the Yankees last season is ready.

But there was great joy for the Red Sox as they hopped aboard the train for Washington to open there today with the Senators And why not, with Grove almost set and needing but a few more workouts to strengthen his arm sufficiently to be able to take his regular turn

By Walter Kiley

The Eagles meet the Crusaders in football at Fitton Field, Worcester next Saturday afternoon

Just in case you rub your eyes and wonder if you're seeing things, let us hasten to explain that the Eagles are not the Boston College Eagles, but represent the Head Coach Eddie Anderson's spring training groups which line up on opposite sides against one another eleven of teammates.

The game, which is to wind up the Holy Cross drills, is to consist of four 12 minute periods. It will share the honors with Jack Barry's baseball team which plays Springfield as the second part of a twin bill

Football is to be of serious nature. The new streamline ball is to be employed, and Director of Athletics Tom McCabe, who takes the occasion to demonstrate interest in the football code. Four prominent officials who annually work the big time college games will be assigned to the officiating

Coach Anderson promises that every one of the 75 candidates for the 1934 eleven who have been working out faithfully since April 6 will get his chance to play some part of the game

PERRY MENACE TO U. S. CUP HOPES

IMPROVEMENT NOTICEABLE IN FOREHAND

By Associated Press.

Wimbledon, Eng., April 24 (AP)—America's Davis Cup hopefuls, if they haven't already been advised of it, may as well learn now that they will be up against two important factors in challenging England for the tennis honors this season.

The first is a better and more confident Fred Perry, ace of the home team. The other is a new and livelier ball.

"I should say Perry is about 30 per cent better than he was at this time a year ago," declared Dan Maskell, professional coach of the British Davis Cup forces, after a brisk workout on the velvety turf of Wimbledon.

BACKHAND BETTER

"His backhand is much better, his forehand is sharper and his service was doing things today that I never taught him.

"Did you notice the way he was spanking them past me with that quick, wrist-action drive he's developed? Gosh, I couldn't see half of them."

Although he was playing only the second time since early February, Perry displayed an amazing assortment of strokes. His forehand, which he used now and then with a sort of whip-like action that caught Maskell flat-footed, bore little resemblance to the flat, medium-paced drive he relied on last summer. It's a far more dangerous weapon.

"I used it a lot in Australia," he said. "It's a winner with this new and faster ball adopted by the International Federation."

USE FASTER BALL

The faster ball, incidentally, will be used both in the all-England championships here and in the Davis Cup contests. Maskell thinks it will help hard-hitters like Frank Shields and Les Stoefen. But he doubts it will help them enough.

"I don't see how any country can take the big cup from us this year," continued Maskell. "You just saw Perry's playing, and I can vouch that Bunny Austin is playing the best tennis of his career right now. In fact, he's reached his peak too soon and my job from now on is to ease him up and keep him ready for the Davis Cup.

"So we have this pair—two of the three or four best singles players in the world—and a couple of first-rate doubles players in Hughes and Lee to help out. Tell me who's going to beat that combination."

BATES QUITS STATE MEET

Lewiston, Me., April 24 (INS)—As a protest against the refusal to allow two stars to compete because they had not been in school before October 15, Bates College today had withdrawn from the Maine intercollegiate track and field association meet this year.

Colby has also withdrawn, leaving only University of Maine and Bowdoin, so the meet this year appears doomed.

The decision by the faculty committee on athletics at Bates to withdraw from the meet was urged by track and field lettermen who protested the refusal of the association to allow Clayton Hunt, quarter miler, and Paul Meagher, pole vaulter, to compete for Bates.

It was pointed out that sickness and finances kept both out of college during the first part of the year, and that they were good students. Bates and Maine favored a change in the association rule, which would allow them to compete but Bowdoin and Colby opposed.

Authorities at Bates emphasized that Bates was not withdrawing from the association, but felt that track competition should be on the same basis as other sports in the state.

2 FORMER DERBY WINNERS ARE IN CLARK CLASSIC

Louisville, Ky., April 24 (AP)—With the winners of the last two Kentucky Derbys as probable starters, the $3500 added Clark Handicap for three-year-olds and over over a mile and a sixteenth will feature the opening day of racing at Churchill Downs Saturday.

The Clark is as old as the Derby, and like the more famous stake has been run continuously since 1875.

GALLANT SIR CARRIES 126

The Northway stable's Gallant Sir has been assigned top weight for the Clark Handicap, 126 pounds. Col. E. R. Bradley's 1932 Derby winner, Burgoo King, drew 122 pounds, and Pluckey Play, a stablemate of Gallant Sir, was assigned 120 pounds.

Weights of other leading eligibles are War Glory, 118; Eseeff, a filly, 115; Larranaga, 115; Tick On, 114; Quatre Bras II, 114; Gold Basis, 114; Broker's Tip, winner of last year's Derby for Colonel Bradley, 113; and 112 each for Barn Swallow, Big Beau, Strideaway, Sun Archer and Liberty Limited.

Colonel Bradley now became last year the only owner to win both the Kentucky Derby and the Kentucky Oaks in the same year when Broker's Tip and Barn Swallow triumphed respectively in the two stakes, has a chance to sweep every major stake at the Downs this year.

4 BRADLEY ENTRIES

His nominees in the Clark Handicap are Burgoo King, Broker's Tip, Tick On and Barn Swallow. His nominees for the Derby are Bazaar, Boy Valet, Blue Again and Baker's Dozen. His fine filly, Bazaar, will be his reliance in the Kentucky Oaks, and he doubtless will have one or more starters in the Bashford Manor Stakes for two-year-olds.

Jacobs Again Tops List as Winning Trainer

By Dave Wilson

Hirsch Jacobs, leading winning trainer of last season, is well on his way toward repeating the feat again. The popular New Yorker is topping the list with 42 winners.

Should Jacobs succeed in heading the list again this year it will be quite an achievement. It has been 14 years since any man has headed the list for two consecutive seasons.

From 1915 to 1920, inclusive, Kay Spence topped the list of America's winning trainers, while from 1912 to 1917, inclusive, H. Guy Bedwell headed the list. Bedwell's record of six straight years has never been equaled. He also finished on top in 1909.

J. A. Nix sends word from Havre de Grace that the absence of Gay World from the Philadelphia Handicap was due to the fact that the horse had turned sour and refused to break in his workouts.

Barney Castle broke his right front leg while being breezed on Saturday at Havre de Grace and was destroyed.

J. B. Belk of Virginia has officially withdrawn his Omar Khay from the Kentucky Derby. The colt was backward in his training.

The sum of $46,000 has been dropped into the claiming box on Maryland tracks this Spring, resulting in 32 horses changing hands.

Mortimer M. Mahony, parl-mutuel manager of Rockingham Park as well as 11 other American tracks, is ill at his home in Baltimore.

The Potter, belonging to the Brannastle Farm, will be on the shelf for quite a spell. The colt suffered severe cuts when he bolted through the fence recently at Havre de Grace during a morning workout.

Tommy Appeals to N. Y. Boxing Comm

New York, April 24 (INS)—Tommy Loughran, perennial Philadelphian, today will ask the New York State Boxing Commission to accept him as challenger of the winner of the Baer-Carnera fight, in the event Tommy beats Walter Neusel, the blond fireman, in their battle May 4.

Loughran will point out that he has already beaten Baer and will claim he should have no worse than a draw against Carnera. Therefore, he will ask that he be accepted as first challenger.

Tech Linksmen to Meet Tufts

The M. I. T. golf team makes its bow on the links tomorrow afternoon, playing the Tufts links team over a course which will be selected today.

John Slosson, Arthur Esslinger and Herbert Goodwin, the latter an ace hockey wing, will be in the Engineer lineup.

Chief Uses Hanger in Mat Bout

Memphis, Tenn., April 24 (AP)—Chief Chewacki, heavyweight wrestler, was disqualified after he wrapped a wire coat hanger around the head of his opponent, Gino Garibaldi, in a wrestling match here. Garibaldi was declared winner.

After Chewacki and Garibaldi had one fall each, Chewacki entered the ring for the third round and pulled the hanger from his trunks.

ROCKINGHAM STAKE LIST PRAISED

A large division of the C. V. Whitney Stable will be sent to Rockingham Park for the 31-day session of the New Hampshire Breeders' Association, which will throw open its gates on June 23.

Thomas J. Healey, head trainer of the C. V. Whitney Stable, in making known his intentions of racing his charges at the Salem, N. H., course, was loud in his praises of the stake list, arranged by Race Secretary Jim Monroe.

The stakes offered by the New Hampshire Breeders' Association, compare favorably with other tracks throughout the country, and they merit the best support of the leading stables," Healey said.

The veteran trainer is so enthused over the forthcoming Rockingham season that he is going to try and persuade Owner C. V. Whitney to run Equipoise, his great money winning star, in one or more of the rich stakes.

Equipoise's appearance in one of the Salem Stakes would attract a record crowd. The Pennant colt has never shown here, and N. E. turfites are anxious to see the big money winner under colors.

News About Port of Boston

By WILLIAM F. MAGUIRE

Boston's fish market is cluttered with fish today as a result of the record catch of yesterday totalling 4,056,200 pounds of haddock, cod, pollock, flounders, brought in by 70 trawlers, schooners and small boats.

Not since 1929 has so much fish been landed in one day. In that year a catch of fish by 59 fishing boats set a record of 3,500,000 pounds, but yesterday's receipts over-totlated that by one and one-half million pounds. In fact so large was the catch that some of the trips remained unsold and were forced to head for Gloucester and Portland for a market.

Valuation of imports for immediate consumption last week amounted to $1,811,821, and imports for warehouse $235,472 contrasted with $1,312,807 for immediate consumption and $78,903, for warehouse, during the corresponding week last year.

Withdrawals from bonded warehouse last week were valued at $136,717, against $78,903 for the same week a year ago.

MEMOIRS OF MR. FRISBY

By Horace W. Frisby, Congressman at Large.

CHAPTER XXII.

Perhaps it would be well to turn to my collection of kodak snaps which I now enter as Exhibit A-333, as proof of my contention that no one has done more than Yours Truly for the "America Beautiful" program, which I originated and fostered, alone and unaided, from 1900 to the present moment. The above print is mute but eloquent evidence of the work I done to bring about the wedding of Transportation and The Home. Out of the pennies contributed for the Relief of Chinese Flood Victims, in 1900, I built the above street car, fashioned in the manner of "A Cottage Small by a Waterfall"—then a popular radio ballad. It was my plan to lease tracks and run this car, charging only a small extra fare. Tired shoppers, busy men, at the end of the day could, I felt, board the street car, take off their shoes and relax, just as though they were at home.

Thus I fought to save the American home and eventually make every crowded street car a "Komfy Kar"—which is and was the name I copyrighted. I planned to have Lady Conductors, wearing attractive house dresses, and instructed to call all passengers by their first names. Tomorrow I will expose the vicious forces that combined to defeat me in a purpose which, if I do say so myself, would have marked the greatest advance in domestic relations since the invention of the Cotton Gin.

Sales Tax Is Needed to Help in Recovery

BEFORE it dies on its feet, the Massachusetts Legislature should adopt the sales tax as a vital means of promoting economic recovery and of encouraging the return of prosperity.

We are not out of the woods yet, by any means. Business conditions have improved, and the optimism of the people has been stimulated. But only those statesmen who imitate the posture of the ostrich with its head in the sand and who refuse to look at the actual conditions around us can believe that we have reached the goal of complete and permanent business revival.

Public welfare expenses have increased, and they will continue to mount in the proportion that men are dropped from the Civil Works and Public Works rosters. Mortgaged homes are still being foreclosed. Credit for new business ventures is still tight in the banks. The national, State and city governments are levying taxes to meet the extraordinary costs of the many expensive adventures of the New Deal, and they have resorted to the reckless expedient of piling those taxes onto real estate or soaking the public through the notorious and impractical income tax laws.

THE Legislature has got to learn that economic recovery will not be restored in all its glory so long as the real estate owner, the home owner and the earner of moderate incomes are taxed beyond their ability to pay. You can't depress the real estate owner, you can't drape the American home with the auctioneer's red flag and you can't stifle the initiative of the wage-earner and the business man through excessive income taxes and expect that firm prosperity will be implanted among these people.

When the National, State and city governments relieve the burdens of these people they will have made the most far-reaching stride toward economic dependability and comfort.

This stride can be achieved in two directions. First, the wanton extravagances of the governments must be reduced. Secondly, taxes should be more equitably distributed. Taxes should be made less drastic to pay and more convenient to pay.

Canada resorted to the sales tax wisely and she has withstood the economic disturbances in stronger condition than any Nation on this hemisphere. The several American States that have adopted the sales tax have benefited, and their fiscal status has improved over their neighbors which have been reluctant and hesitant in the matter of the sales tax. We should take profit from their experience. The sentiment of our people is in favor of this just and convenient tax. The Legislature should take the blinds off its eyes and get into step with sane progress.

Save the Camps!

The future of the citizens' military training camps is hanging in the balance.

At the instigation of Congressman Collins, of Mississippi, the House, upon the hypocritical plea of economy, reduced to less than a million dollars the annual appropriation for the support of citizens' military training camps.

This amount would barely suffice to train one out of seven who will apply for training from each of the 435 congressional districts into which the continental United States is divided.

Instead of training at least 40,000 young Americans with the patriotic initiative to enroll in these splendid schools of citizenship, the House appropriation would permit the training of only 14,000 of the more than 100,000 who will volunteer for this training.

When the War Department Appropriation Bill reached the Senate, the House appropriation for the training camps was increased to $2,600,000—an amount sufficient to train 37,500.

The fate of this increased appropriation rests with the conferees of the two Houses.

Unquestionably, the Senate represents the true sentiment of the American people in appropriating for the training of at least 40,000 young citizens with the colors.

These splendid schools of citizenship have always rendered great service to the nation, and the service they are so well-equipped to render would be doubly valuable now.

At least many young men in every State in the Union are somewhat demoralized by the difficulties they have encountered in these years of depression. The training camps offer opportunities that would strengthen their patriotism, improve them mentally and physically, and enable them to make themselves more useful and more loyal citizens.

If the citizens' military training camps had never been established, now would be the time to inaugurate them.

But we have had them for years. They have proved their value.

Public sentiment strongly supports their continuance at normal strength.

Greet 'Old Ironsides'

The famous frigate Constitution, "Old Ironsides," will return to Boston about May 1, after an absence of two years, and plans are being made for a gala reception in honor of her homecoming.

"Old Ironsides" is something more than wood and steel and sail. She is emblematic of the American Navy. She typifies American independence. She is a living relic of the valor of American seamanship.

Moreover, she is the foremost representative of both the maritime importance of Boston and of our invaluable contribution to the creation of the American government.

"Old Ironsides" is as much a part of Boston as the Common, Faneuil Hall, the Old North Church and the similar landmarks of the Revolutionary period. Here she was built, here she was outfitted for her conquest of the sea and here she should be maintained and preserved forever as an inspiration in loyalty and fidelity to the present and future generations of Americans. Once she is back, we should resolve never to permit her to be dragooned away from us again, no matter how serious and inviting the pretext may be.

A thoughtful Bostonian suggested some years ago that "Old Ironsides" should be encased in a concrete bed in the Charles River Basin, where, in her majesty and beauty, she would be available to the view and homage of our own people and our tourists who come to us from every section of America to revere our Colonial shrines. Now that she is to come back to us permanently, we should consider this project seriously or any other suggestion that will encourage interest in her history. We have a great history and we should be sufficiently proud of it to put it on constant display.

The Right Policy

For ten years the American Legion has been endeavoring to have the American Army restored to the standards set by the National Defense Act—a peacetime force of 165,000 enlisted men and 14,000 officers, with proper training each year for additional reserve officers.

The Thompson Bill, pending in Congress, will increase the present depleted force of Regulars by 50,000 men.

In hearings before the House Military Affairs Committee, this important bill has been advocated by spokesmen for the Legion, for the Reserve Officers' Association, for the Daughters of the American Revolution and for the Citizens' Military Training Camps, and by Secretary of War Dern and Chief of Staff MacArthur.

It is the expert opinion of the Chief of Staff that the increase is a necessity. At present, he said, WE COULD NOT RESIST AN INVASION.

This Congress has authorized a treaty-strength Navy.

It has authorized a sufficient Navy Air Force.

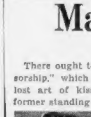
Let it now complete its patriotic labors by making the Army what the Army should be and must be, if national security is to be maintained.

Marry-Go-Round

By Helen Rowland

There ought to be a "Kiss Censorship," which would bring the lost art of kissing back to its former standing among the graceful accomplishments by the simple method of deleting all kisses which do not delight.

And by that, we mean "delight everybody"—the woman, the man and (if it's a stage kiss) the audience. Even a moving picture audience closes its eyes and begins to feel slightly nauseated after the 30th or 40th long, long kiss in a "hot-mama" movie.



Helen Rowland

A kiss, after all, is merely a physiological expression of a psychological condition — or SHOULD be. But that doesn't give you any idea of what it is like. A kiss may be anything, from a compliment to an insult—according to the time, the place and the man's knowledge of the art of love-making.

One man can kiss a girl in a way to make her feel that she has won a beauty prize; and another man can kiss her in a way to make her feel as though she had been robbed of her pocketbook. Yet the "psychological condition" in both cases may have been the same—pure love or pure audacity.

All rough-house kissing, rumble-seat mushing and taxicab mauling, should be deleted, pronto. They are the mark of the amateur and the immature, and should be classed as "misdemeanors punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both." Ten dollars or thirty days!

To kiss a woman—even your own wife—without removing your hat should be a "felony" in the eyes of the law. And to kiss her in order to close an argument (and incidentally to close her mouth) when she is winning, should constitute grounds for a suit for damages.

To kiss your wife, when she has just finished putting on the last touch of make-up and is going down to greet the dinner-guests is sheer brutality and ought to give her grounds for divorce on the "cruelty" clause.

And to kiss any woman apologetically, immediately after she has caught you kissing another woman, should be a state's prison offense. There is nothing so tiresome to a woman as that old familiar "kiss of remorse."

SHE knows that you are "sorry." Not sorry for what you did—but sorry that you were caught!

In some States to kiss any woman "against her will" was once a "crime" in the eyes of the law. Her toothbrush and her kisses were the only things that were regarded as her personal property, to keep or dispose of without a man's signature.

But that day is past! Woman's will has weakened and so has her "won't." The only crime a man can commit is to kiss a woman against her DESIRE. And it's pretty hard to convince him that that is possible! Yet many a man has kissed a gal out of sheer compassion when she felt like crying "Kamerad!"

That's why we need a "Kiss Censorship" to delete unwelcome kissing and restore the kiss to its ancient place among glamorous love-thrills.

A timid old woman pushed open a door,
For lost in the building was she,
And the person she anxiously questioned for Seemed nowhere about to be.

Disturbed by her coming, a man arose,
But he smiled as he heard her say:
"With so many doors that open and close,
I'm afraid I have lost my way.

"They have sent me here and they've sent me there,
And so busy they seem to be,
I suppose they haven't a minute to spare
For a poor little body like me."

The man said: "Worry yourself no more.
Come, follow along with me
And I'll take you straight to the very door
Of the person you wish to see."

"You're the thoughtfulest man of them all," said she,
As out of the room they went;
And the man replied: "Well, I ought to be!
I'm the company's president."

Listen World!

By Elsie Robinson

Little Billy is born in America. Every year, millions of little Billies are born in America.

Elsie Robinson

Little Billie grows up. Presently, when he gets around to it, or when the family gets around to it, little Billy goes to work. He goes to work at something he likes, if he has his choice. If he hasn't, he works at anything he can get.

Outside of Billy's personal desire—or the ebb and flow of local opportunity—there is no particular plan about Billy's work. Once in a blue moon, Billy starts to work at something unusual—something for which there is a growing demand.

Nine times out of ten, he falls into an overcrowded rut; begins to produce something with which the market is already glutted, so price of the commodity cheapens. The value of Billy's work lessens. Presently, inevitably, there is a slump in Billy's particular market. No one wants what Billy can produce. Billy's out of a job.

When there are enough slumps—when there are enough Billies out of jobs—there's a depression. When the depression spreads too far, lasts too long, there's a heap of trouble—a nation going to the dogs.

THAT'S THE RESULT OF UNPLANNED LIFE . . . UNPLANNED WORK . . . UNPLANNED PRODUCTION AND DEMAND.

For the last five years a bothered and bewildered nation has been wondering if there's any way to escape that. Russia thinks she knows the answer. But we don't like Russia's answer. Italy thinks SHE knows the answer. But we don't like Italy's answer any better than we like Russia's. We still have a hunch that we want to go on being America—a democracy—and giving real American answers. And now a smart old lady down in Florida thinks that she has discovered what a real American answer should be.

Her name is Prestonia Mann Martin. She should know. She's an answer, for she's been circulating around these parts for over 70 years. She remembers the good old days, and she has tussled with the bad new days. And she believes that the way to lick poverty, and the discouragement, despair, and general messy muddle which go with poverty, is to—

PUT YOUTH TO WORK!

She wouldn't let Billy "just grow" like a young turnip and then go to work if, when, how and where he pleased. She'd make Billy's job a matter of national concern. First, she'd see that Bill had a real EDUCATION until he was eighteen . . . practical training in some definite line which needed workers, and into which Billy, with his particular talents, could fit.

THEN AT 18, SHE'D HAVE BILL CONSCRIPTED!

Yes—actually conscripted by the government. As soldiers in Europe are conscripted. And made to serve a term at some job until he was 28—just as European soldiers are made to serve a term in the army.

All this to be considered as part of their education, as well as compulsory service to the nation.

No hit or miss work, mind you. "Industrial organization under scientific direction, to supply a sufficiency of the necessary goods and services, without buying or selling them, to the entire populace."

Big words—meaning what? Meaning simply that the young people would do the nation's work—WITHOUT PAY—WITHOUT MARRIAGE—and wise heads would so direct labor and production that there would be no poverty.

Then, after 28? Why, after 28, they could marry; have homes and careers of their own. Go on adventures. Raise their families. Study. Run their nation. BUT ALWAYS THE ROUGH WORK WOULD BE DONE BY THE YOUNGSTERS.

Well—what do you think of it? Do you think THAT would abolish poverty? Regulate our present crazy nightmare of unplanned production and demand?

What's even more essential—WOULD IT BRING BACK THE OLD AMERICAN SPIRIT . . . THE OLD AMERICAN PRIDE . . . THE OLD AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE?

WOULD IT TURN US FROM A NATION OF DRONES, DRUDGES AND DESPERATES DERELICTS INTO A NATION OF TRAINED, PROUD, SELF-RELIANT CITIZENS?

Mrs. F. D. Roosevelt thinks it would. Do YOU?

Human Side of the News; Master Gambler of U. S.

By Edwin C. Hill

Colonel Edward R. Bradley, of Kentucky and Palm Beach, is called as a witness before a committee of the United States Senate, a rare experience, indeed, for the master gambler of America, and for one who avoids publicity and public appearance with all of the modesty of the shrinking violet.

But a very interesting gentleman, Colonel Bradley of old Kentucky, suh. He's 62 now, gray, poker-faced, dignified, reserved, remote; his life something of a mystery in a country where the careers of most rich men are open books. A bit taller that the average height, straight-backed, still minus a waistline, he is a most fastidious dresser and is seldom seen without spats and high, starched collar.

One of the most celebrated breeders of thoroughbreds in the Bluegrass, or in the world, his great farm near Lexington is like a corner of the old South before the Civil War. Colonel Bradley is the only man who ever won three Kentucky derbies. He won with Behave Yourself, Bubbling Over and Burgoo King. The name of every horse he breeds and runs, begins with "B."

His swanky gambling house on the Gold Coast at Palm Beach is the most famous gambling resort from Paris to Papeete.

AVOIDS SCANDAL

Bradley, immensely rich, has two great aims in life—to win the Kentucky Derby and to maintain the Beach Club, his Palm Beach palace of chance, without a mutter of scandal.

A motion picture magnate screamed one night that his three hundred thousand dollar loss at chemin de fer was not solely due to bad luck. Colonel Bradley bowed coldly, ordered the cashier to return the gentleman's money, and wished him good evening—permanently.

Entree to the club is not easy to secure. The rich people who flock to Bradley's afternoons and nights in the Palm Beach season are as sensitive as century plants. Many of them are at the head of large business interests. The Beach Club, therefore, is guarded like the White House. One is impressed by the quaint old-fashioned appearance, inside and out, of this swanky house of chance where millionaires buck the tiger and the sky is the limit.

VERY PLAIN INTERIOR

The house itself is a sprawling, white-painted wooden structure, on a business street of Palm Beach some distance from the beach and the big hotels.

But the astute Bradley knows his business. The interior is plain because it is the show-off the Paris frocks and the jewels of his feminine patrons. A long hallway in green and white leads to a large room at the rear, where the only works of art are the roulette wheels, noiselessly spinning.

LAST OF HIS KIND

Above stairs are the rooms where the big play is carried on, at night, in the season—the tables for chemin de fer and baccarat. One of these tables, at least, has seen a single individual drop seven hundred thousand dollars in one night's play.

Edward R. Bradley is the last of the big gamblers—the only one with much color since the late Dick Canfield grimly locked the great bronze door of Number Five East Forty-fourth st., in New York, turned his attention to old masters and piously terminated a remarkable career.

Once more the Federal Court gives the weight of its authority to President Roosevelt's New Deal. A most important decision as to the constitutionality of the National Recovery Act has been handed down in the Federal Court of New York by John C. Knox, a judge who is known for his forthright opinions.

The case was an obscure one, such as the Dred Scott case and the more recent Rochester loaf of bread case, which gave the present United States Supreme Court the opportunity to render a verdict on the Roosevelt program. Price fixing, the keystone of code making, was the kernel of the case before Judge Knox. The Government had marshaled its forces against the Spotless Dollar Cleaners, Inc., a chain organization in New York which was cleaning men's suits for thirty-nine cents and women's dresses for forty-five cents.

The prices under the code fixed by the industry are seventy and seventy-five cents for each of the items. The importance of the case was emphasized by the counsel appearing in it, Martin W. Littleton for the company, and United States Attorney Martin Conboy for the government.

JUDGE KNOX'S VIEW

In upholding the government's right to fix prices under the N.R.A., Judge Knox said:

"The strategy of battle, within the limits of strength, belongs to the authority in command. And who can rightly say with assurance that governmental price-fixing, when confined to transactions in interstate commerce, is not a means reasonably adapted to the legitimate ends which Congress seeks to serve?"

Mr. Conboy viewed the court's opinion as of the utmost importance to the enforcement of the recovery program, saying: "The act and the code are attacked upon every possible level and constitutional ground. It is gratifying to know that the government has been upheld upon a clean cut issue involving the aim of national recovery."

People Should Eliminate Clowns From Congress

By James T. Williams, Jr.

If President Roosevelt adheres to his present intention, he will decline to interfere, and he will forbid Postmaster-General Farley to interfere, in any senatorial or congressional Democratic primary to be held this summer.

By keeping his administration out of the coming Democratic primaries, Mr. Roosevelt will demonstrate his faith in the fitness of the American people to choose their own candidates for the Senate and House of Representatives without any meddlesome interference by the executive branch of the government.

PLENTY FACE DEFEAT

And, if given the chance, the people in state after state will vindicate that faith by raising the standard of the Democratic party's representation in both Houses of the new Congress to be elected next November.

It would be a tremendous benefit to the administration, the Congress and the country if at least a half-dozen more of the one-half of the Democratic membership of the House could be defeated in the summer primaries of the Democratic party. This achievement would mean that the President's party would elect a new Congress better qualified to serve the country and aid the President.

There are too many political clowns in the present Congress. There are too many noisy publicity seekers. There are too many bellhops of special privilege and there are too many dupes of various and sundry schemers, both foreign and domestic.

These undesirables lack the character which the people have a right to require shall distinguish their senators and representatives in Congress.

HUMILIATION SHARED

These undesirables lack the sense of moral responsibility that stamps a statesman. They lack those high ideals of public service that the plain people associate with the name of Roosevelt. These undesirables have no right to call themselves the political followers of Thomas Jefferson or Abraham Lincoln. They have no place in an American Congress.

In too many states the people have fallen into the habit of electing a political mediocrity or undesirable to Congress in the vain belief that they are getting him out of the state. This is never true, from a moral or physical sense. The state shares with the federal Union the humiliation, the disgrace and the other evils that follow in the wake of electing to either House of Congress a senator or representative who is either unworthy of the honor or unqualified to discharge his manifold responsibilities.

Veterans of both Houses who possess at least some of the stuff of which statesmen are made will confess in confidence that the standard of legislative representation in the Federal City today is far below the standard of executive leadership exemplified by President Roosevelt.

The sober and truly patriotic Democrats in both Houses are well aware that the Democratic party is suffering today throughout the country by reason of the antics of certain so-called Democrats in Congress. These undesirables are responsible to no leadership. They have no principles.

INTELLIGENCE LACKING

Their appeal is never to the intelligence of their local or their national constituencies. Their appeal is always to ignorance and prejudices. They show this by their speeches, as well as by their votes. Instead of being a help to the President, they constitute one of the heaviest handicaps under which his leadership labors. Instead of being an asset to their party, they are an unmitigated liability.

Congress is not strengthened by the presence of such men but finds in their membership only a source of mortification and weakness.
